Mr. Leahy also inquired about statutory interpretation, asking whether the judge would consult "legislative history." Judge Gregory proceeded to say nothing about legislative history but emphasized that he would follow "the plain English" of the law - the text as written.

Sen. Leahy didn't attempt to pursue the issue, even though he couldn't have missed that Judge Gregory had just given an answer that could have been supplied by, well, Justice Antonin Scalia.

Justice Scalia disdains resorting to legislative history, because doing so encourages judges to expand their power and effectively write new laws. He insists, more strongly than any judge anywhere, on a textual approach to statutory interpretation. Justice Scalia, whom Mr. Bush held up during the campaign as a prime example of the kind of judge he would nominate, is precisely the kind of jurist Democrats like Sen. Leahy wish most fervently not to see appointed to any court.

It is a mistake, of course, to make too much of such exchanges. But the ones between Judge Gregory and Mr. Leahy were amusing at the least, and you can bet that if a genuine Bush nominee were to give the answers the judge gave, particularly on statutory interpretation, there would be more than a few follow-up questions asked by the Democrats.

All of which is to say no one should be fooled by the placid (and short) hearing. Last Thursday, all three nominees won committee approval by a 19-0 vote. But there will be hearings for plainly conservative judicial nominees, and fights over some of them remain quite likely.

The Choice Is Theirs

said choice was one of the "fundamental issues" about which he and the Bush team disagreed. With Jeffords' switch, Democrats took control of Senate committees -- a change that the Feminist Majority Foundation says "will be crucial to reproductive rights, as pro-choice Democrats will replace anti-choice Republicans." So, choice is safer today, right?

In some critical ways, yes. The Bush team's biggest fear is that Democrats will hold up key appointments -- especially confirmations to the judiciary. The Democratic leadership could do to the Republicans what Sen. Trent Lott did to the Clinton administration for eight years: simply refuse to bring nominations up for a vote. But there's reason to believe they won't. For all their fighting words, the Democrats confirmed Ted Olson -- a conservative attorney who has fought aggressively against women's rights and affirmative action -- as solicitor general. The Democrats had the power to filibuster Olson's confirmation (the vote was tight: 51 to 47), but the party leadership decided not to act. Conciliation was the better part of valor, they explained.

And that's how choice could fall victim to Capitol Hill brinkmanship. Focused on the Supreme Court, Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle likely will let lesser appointments slide by. But talk to abortion providers, and you find that those appointments are often where the real action is. It's at the local level that anti-Roe folks can pull the plug on women's rights -- to little fanfare but maximum effect.

Consider the case of Denise O'Donnell. For the past two and a half years, O'Donnell, as U.S. attorney for the Western District of New York, pursued the killer of Buffalo obstetrician Barnett Slepian. After a complicated international investigation, police in France finally arrested James Charles Kopp, the alleged assassin. On May 4, O'Donnell's office filed papers seeking Kopp's extradition to New York to stand trial. Since France does not extradite suspects who face capital punishment, Attorney General John Ashcroft had to assure French government officials that prosecutors would not seek to execute Kopp, who faces a state murder charge and the additional charge of violating the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act (FACE). A decision on extradition is due June 28.

In New York, federal prosecutors picked up Loretta Claire Marra and Dennis John Malvasi of Brooklyn, and charged them with aiding the fugitive Kopp. Eleanor Smeal of the Feminist Majority Foundation told Women's Enews that if O'Donnell hadn't spearheaded the case, Kopp might never have been caught. In her investigation of Slepian's murder, O'Donnell made crucial, political choices to cast a wide net in the belief that Kopp didn't act alone. In doing so, she trailed Kopp and his associates across the Atlantic and brought what Smeal calls an "international anti-choice conspiracy" to light.

But O'Donnell won't be on hand to prosecute, if and when the Kopp case finally makes it to court. On March 15, George W. Bush demanded her resignation in the middle of her four-year term. She vacated her office on May 31.

U.S. attorneys, appointed by the president, generally tender their resignations when a new administration takes office. But there have been exceptions. In O'Donnell's case, both New York Sens. Hillary Clinton and Chuck Schumer asked the White House to permit O'Donnell to complete her term. No dice. Although no new nominee has been named yet, the most likely replacement is a conservative Republican judge currently on the state family court. Kathleen M. Mehlretter, the district's former deputy attorney, is temporarily filling the post.

If the Democrats are out for "conciliation," it's unlikely that they will deem the U.S. attorney post serious enough to merit a grand fight. But for beleaguered abortion providers, the U.S. attorney is all-important. By enforcing clinic protection laws like FACE, O'Donnell made it possible for people like Marilyn Buckham, the administrator of the clinic where Slepian worked, to concentrate on providing health care, instead of having to focus on raising millions of dollars for clinic repairs, staff protection and lawsuits simply to get criminals into court. As Buckham told Women's Enews in May: "For what we went through, thank God it was under the [Clinton] administration."

National pro-choice groups usually confine their work to electing pro-choice candidates and lobbying against abortion restrictions and anti-choice Supreme Court justices. As critical as Washington is, the spotlight on federal judicial nominations obscures another crucial area in the fight for choice -- one much closer to home.

Schumer sits on the Senate Judiciary Committee. Maybe he and his colleagues will be able to block the incoming U.S. attorney candidate and demand O'Donnell's reinstatement. That will depend on whether Democratic leaders consider the post important enough -- and how much heat they get from their constituents.

Senate Approves Federal Judges

By Jesse Holland
Associated Press
Friday, July 20, 2001

After a yearlong battle, the Senate confirmed Roger Gregory on Friday as the first black federal appeals court judge in the district that represents a higher percentage of minorities than any other in the nation.

It took two presidents, three senators and several deals to permanently integrate the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, a southern circuit serving Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina, West Virginia and Maryland.

Gregory's district has 22 percent minorities, the highest percentage in the nation.

"It always speaks well when the courts are reflective of all that America has, but the most important thing is that judges serve with integrity and competence in every regard," he said after the Senate confirmed him to a lifetime appointment, 93-1.

Gregory watched the action from his home in Richmond, Va., more than a year after Sen. John Warner, R-Va., and then-Sen. Charles Robb, D-Va., said they would submit his name for the federal appeals court. "It feels good to finally have it over," Gregory said.

Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., voted against Gregory because then-President Clinton appointed him to the court on a temporary basis last December while the GOP-controlled Senate was in recess, said spokesman Ron Bonjean.

The Senate unanimously approved two U.S. District Court judges, Sam Haddon and Richard Cebull, both of Montana.

The federal judiciary has been a flash point between Republicans and Democrats, and Gregory's confirmation illustrated the machinations that have gone on in the Capitol.

Last year, Democrats accused Republicans of blocking Clinton's judicial nominees out of hope that a GOP president would win the November election. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., for example, stopped several North Carolina nominees for Gregory's seat by using a senatorial prerogative that lets senators bar nominees from their state.

Helms was retaliating for Democrats blocking his nominee, U.S. District Judge Terrance Boyle, from that seat when the first President Bush was in office. "For more than 15 months, he was never accorded the courtesy of a hearing," Helms wrote in June. "Thus, North Carolina continues the distinction of never having had a Republican judge on the Fourth Circuit since the honorable John J. Parker was nominated by President Coolidge."

To get around Helms, Clinton tapped Gregory of Virginia in June 2000 after getting support from Robb and Warner. However, the GOP-controlled Senate refused to give Gregory a hearing last year, leading Clinton to give him the temporary appointment.

Bush won the presidency and withdrew all of Clinton's still unconfirmed nominees, including Gregory. But with the Senate split 50-50 giving Democrats enough members to filibuster any nominee _ Bush renominated Gregory as one of his first 11 judicial nominees.

GOP Sen. George Allen of Virginia, who defeated Robb in that election, immediately backed Gregory.

"I asked my colleagues, and indeed the president, to not view Roger Gregory based upon the former president's political manipulations," Allen said.

Bush also renominated Boyle, and Republicans linked the nominations of Boyle and Gregory to prevent Democrats from sinking Boyle again. But then the Senate was taken over by the Democrats, who separated the two and made Gregory their first order of business.

"Mr. Gregory and many, many others have languished not only for months, but in some cases for years," said Senate Majority Leader Thomas Daschle, D-S.D. "And so in order to rectify that we put a very high priority on Mr. Gregory's confirmation."

Republicans now complain that Democrats are delaying Bush's other nominees and have threatened to hold bills hostage unless executive and judicial nominations get faster action. The GOP says their tactics have forced Democrats to move more than 70 executive and departmental nominees through in the last two weeks.

However, the judicial war isn't over. Three other Appeals Court nominees Jeff Sutton, Miguel Estrada and Michael McConnell have organized resistance against them.

The federal court system has 107 vacancies, and 25 Bush nominees have yet to receive hearings by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The battle over the 15-seat 4th Circuit isn't over either. Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., has threatened to block Boyle's nomination unless Bush renominates one of the judges Helms blocked earlier.

Senators Confirm 3 Judges, Including Once-Stalled Black

By Alison Mitchell
The New York Times
Saturday, July 21, 2001

The Senate confirmed federal judges today for the first time since the Democrats took control in May, including Roger Gregory, who was initially named to the bench by President Bill Clinton in a recess appointment after the Republican-run Senate stalled his nomination.

Mr. Gregory, who was approved 94 to 1, is the first black judge to serve on the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, which covers Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia. Senator Trent Lott of Mississippi, the Republican leader, cast the lone vote against him.

Blacks make up 22 percent of the circuit's population, a figure higher than in any other federal jurisdiction. Mr. Clinton nominated four black judges to the Fourth Circuit but not one was granted a hearing. Mr. Gregory, a corporate lawyer in Richmond, Va., was nominated in June 2000.

Before leaving office, Mr. Clinton angered some Republicans by giving Mr. Gregory a temporary appointment to the court after the Senate adjourned for the year. Such a recess appointee is allowed to serve just one year. President Bush -- whose attorney general, John Ashcroft, came under fire in his nominations hearings for blocking a black nominee for the federal court -- renominated Mr. Gregory for a lifetime appointment in May.

"This makes a statement, I think, that is very important," Senator Tom Daschle of South Dakota, the majority leader, said today in praising both Mr. Clinton and Mr. Bush.

Virginia's two senators, John W. Warner and George F. Allen, both Republicans, called for Mr. Gregory's approval today, with Mr. Warner saying, "We are at a historic moment here with Judge Gregory."

Mr. Allen said Mr. Gregory, who had been the first person in his family to finish high school, had an "inspirational story" and a "proper judicial philosophy." He asked fellow Republicans not to view the nominee "based upon the former president's political manipulations."

Ronald D. Bonjean Jr., a spokesman for Mr. Lott, said Mr. Lott's opposition to Mr. Gregory was "an institutional decision" designed to protect Senate prerogatives and underscore his stance that "any appointment of federal judges during a recess should be opposed."

The Senate today also confirmed two other Bush nominees, Sam Haddon and Richard Cebull, as federal district judges in Montana.

The confirmation of federal judges and the ideological makeup of the courts has been a flash point between the two parties, and some of Mr. Bush's more conservative nominees are expected to have a rough time before a Democratic-led Senate.

Protesting that Democrats planned to block judges because of ideology, Republicans held up the full reorganization of the Senate under Democratic control for about a month late this spring in an effort to win a promise that all nominees for the Supreme Court would get a Senate floor vote, no matter how the Senate Judiciary Committee ruled on them.

Senate Confirms 3 Bush Judges; GOP Procedural Tactics Clear Way For Spending Bill Votes

The Senate yesterday approved President Bush's first batch of judicial nominees, and Majority Leader Tom Daschle pledged to speed up executive nominees stalled in the Democrat-controlled body.

Roger Gregory was approved 93-1 to a permanent seat on the U.S. Appeals Court, with Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, as the lone dissenter. Sam Haddon was approved 95-0 to the U.S. District Court in Montana, and Richard Cebull was approved 93-0 to the same bench.

Both Republicans and Democrats praised the confirmation of Judge Gregory, who was first nominated by President Clinton last year, but blocked by Republicans. Mr. Clinton bypassed the Senate and installed Judge Gregory to the bench during a December congressional recess.

Judge Gregory was appointed to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The panel hears cases from Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat and chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said Judge Gregory is "one of the few nominees ever nominated by presidents of different parties."

"President Bush deserves credit for renominating Judge Gregory and allowing the Senate a third chance to consider and confirm this outstanding nominee," Mr. Leahy said.

"We are at a historic moment here with Judge Gregory," said Sen. John W. Warner, Virginia Republican.

Sen. George F. Allen, Virginia Republican, asked his colleagues not to view Judge Gregory based upon the former president's "political manipulations."

In his first Senate floor speech earlier this year, Mr. Allen asked that Judge Gregory be judged "on the basis of his qualifications."

Mr. Lott opposed Judge Gregory's nomination because he opposes all recess appointments, said Ron Bonjean, Mr. Lott's spokesman.

Senate Republicans have employed procedural stalling tactics on spending bills to force Democratic leaders to speed up the confirmation process.

Republicans were successful in getting 74 nominees confirmed in seven legislative days but have lists of more than 100 names still awaiting hearings and votes.

In exchange for the judicial nominee votes and 18 executive nominees approved late Thursday,

Republicans allowed the Senate to proceed with three spending bills.

One Republican aide compared the tactic to a pace car allowing a race to begin.

Republicans stalled Senate business all day Thursday while negotiations continued over the nominees - frustrating Democrats in the process.

The strategy to link spending bills to nominees is necessary to get the process moving, Republicans said, and is endorsed by Mr. Lott.

"All I say to Democrats is: Welcome to the majority. This is what the minority does to the majority," Mr. Lott told reporters Thursday.

Despite the "tremendous amount of unfairness associated with the consideration of Clinton nominees" under Republican rule, Mr. Daschle said Democrats will be "fair" with Mr. Bush's nominees.

"The nomination process is going to be the subject, of course, of a great deal of debate," said Mr. Daschle of South Dakota.

"And I don't know what the total number will be, but over the course of the next week or so, we will have dozens more. And we'll continue to press to try to complete our work," Mr. Daschle said.

However, Mr. Daschle said senators have a right to "express themselves and use whatever parliamentary devices if they feel there is justifiable need for opposition."

Mr. Leahy said the delay in confirming judicial nominees was due to the reorganization of the Senate from Republican to Democratic control when Sen. James M. Jeffords of Vermont switched from the Republican Party to become an independent.

"I am sorry that we lost the month of June to the process of reorganizing the Senate, but I am proud of the very quick start that the committee has gotten on holding hearings and reporting nominees," Mr. Leahy said.

Senate Confirms 3 Of Bush's Judicial Nominees; Courts: Choice For 4th Circuit - - Named To The Post Temporarily By Clinton - -Is The Bench's First Black Member

By David Savage

President Bush won Senate confirmation of his first judges Friday, but the victory was celebrated more by liberal activists and Democrats than by the administration's conservative supporters.

Judge Roger Gregory, an African American lawyer from Richmond, Va., won Senate approval to a permanent judgeship on the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, a year after President Clinton nominated him to the same post.

The Senate also confirmed two trial court judges from Montana: Sam Haddon and Richard Cebull.

Despite Friday's vote, 109 vacancies remain on the federal bench, and the Senate is not expected to vote on more of Bush's court nominees until the fall.

Administration officials say they are frustrated at the slow pace of confirmations, and conservative activist Tom Jipping accused the Democrats of following "an aggressive obstructionist strategy."

"I hope the Democrats don't think they are fooling anyone with this [vote]. It shows only that they will not fight a Clinton nominee who is black," said Jipping, a lawyer for the Free Congress Foundation.

Meanwhile, the liberal Alliance for Justice said it was pleased with Gregory's confirmation to the conservative appeals court, which had been all white.

"This sends the right signal, that if you nominate judges who are not out of step with the concerns of average Americans, they will be confirmed," said Marcia Kuntz, who heads the alliance's judicial selection project.

Gregory won confirmation on a 94-1 vote, with only Trent Lott of Mississippi, the Republican leader, voting no.

But the lopsided approval of Gregory as the first Bush judge masks an ongoing political struggle and makes for a strange twist in the political battles over the courts.

Throughout Clinton's term, he tried to add the first black jurist to the 15-member 4th Circuit Court. Its region, which extends from Maryland to South Carolina, has the highest percentage of African Americans of any federal circuit, yet it was the only appeals court that had never had a minority judge.

Four of its judgeships were authorized to be filled by North Carolinians, but Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) vetoed three of Clinton's black nominees. They were denied hearings in the Senate Judiciary Committee, leaving North Carolina with no representation on the appeals court.

With his time in the White House running out, Clinton last year looked to Virginia. Gregory had been a protege of former Virginia Gov. L. Douglas Wilder, and he was supported by the state's two U.S. senators, including Republican John W. Warner.

Despite that support, the Republican-controlled Senate took no action on Gregory's nomination last year.

Undaunted, Clinton, while the Senate was in recess, appointed Gregory to the appeals court for a one-year term.

When Bush moved into the White House, he decided in a bipartisan gesture to renominate Gregory in his first batch of court picks. And when the Democrats retook control the Senate in May, they decided to move first on Gregory.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), who became chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said the Bush White House and the Senate Republicans deserve much of the blame for the slow start on approving judges.

Bush's lawyers changed the long-standing practice of having the American Bar Assn. conduct a semiofficial review of judicial candidates before they were nominated. But Senate Democrats insisted on those reviews, which were done after the nominations were announced.

In June, after losing control of the Senate, the Republicans sought new rules that would clear the way for a full Senate vote on all nominations. The Democrats refused, saying they would follow the same rules the Republicans used when they were in the majority.

Leahy said again Friday that he has no intention of blocking Bush's judicial nominees but that those with bipartisan support will move first.

"The Senate can act promptly on consensus nominees," Leahy said. If presidential nominees are supported by home-state Democrats as well as by Republicans, they are likely to win quick approval, he said.

Typically, new administrations get off to a slow start in filling court vacancies, but Bush's aides say the Democrats are stalling for no good reason.

"This is totally unprecedented, and there is a high level of irritation over it," said one administration official who asked not to be named.

Bush's advisors say Clinton judges won Senate confirmation, on average, 81 days after they were nominated. This was so, they said, despite yearlong delays for several nominees.

They say the Senate is behind schedule on their nominees already, as only three judges have been approved in the 72 days since Bush sent his first nominees to Capitol Hill.

But David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy, said those numbers ignore that the first year of an administration is always slow going.

"Clinton had only four appeals court judges confirmed in his first year, and Bush senior had only five," he said.

Bush Shows His Arrogance

By P.K. Cranford
The Arkansas Democrat-Gazette
Friday, July 20, 2001

I find it so disingenuous of letter writer Ronald Stanley to claim that George W. Bush has reached across party lines in a show of bipartisanship and to complain that the Democrats are holding up Bush's judicial nominees in a display of partisanship. Since taking office, Bush has demonstrated an arrogant "my way or the highway" attitude. He has shown no effort toward being bipartisan--at least, not before the James Jeffords defection. After nine years of the vicious partisanship displayed by the Republican Party, what does Stanley expect? For years, Bill Clinton's judicial nominees were held up in committee and not even allowed to come to the floor for a vote. That is the reason for the vacancies in federal judgeships our nation is now experiencing. Had the Republicans been more inclined to allow Clinton's nominees a vote, the Democrats would probably be more inclined to give Bush the same consideration. I have a feeling judicial nominations not getting to the floor for a vote won't be the only brick wall Dubya crashes into during the next loooong three years. Remember, what goes around comes around and usually picks up speed along the way. And to letter writer H.D. Flanders of Hot Springs, bravo. I couldn't agree more.

The Hill Hearing That Didn't Bark

For some months now, the basic story line on President Bush's effort to choose judges for the federal bench has been that it will meet resistance from Senate Democrats - so much that fights, perhaps even ones approaching Borkean intensity, are inevitable.

Indeed, in seeming preparation for such battles, a Judiciary Committee subcommittee led by New York Sen. Charles Schumer recently commenced a series of hearings on such questions as the role of ideology in judicial selection. Earlier this month, however, Mr. Schumer and his Democratic colleagues on the Judiciary Committee decided to conduct their first hearing for Bush judicial nominees, three in all. Let the record show that, though the hearing room was packed with partisans from both sides of the judicial divide, a fight didn't break out.

The reason one didn't was apparent, for Senate Democrats had decided to open with entirely noncontroversial nominees. Two are nominees for district judgeships (choices for district courts almost never are contested) in a state, Montana, where there is a palpable need for such judges. (Montana is entitled to three district judges, and only one currently is sitting, no doubt exhausted.)

The other nominee is Judge Roger Gregory, whom Bill Clinton named a year ago to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. With Republicans refusing to hold a hearing on Mr. Gregory, Mr. Clinton appointed him in December when the Senate was in recess. Judge Gregory, whose temporary appointment will expire at year's end, was the Democrats' leading example of a nominee wrongly blocked by Senate Republicans. In a move designed to placate Democrats and improve confirmation prospects for subsequent nominees, President Bush included the judge among his first selections, thus making him one of the few people ever to have been chosen for the same bench by presidents of different political parties.

More was said in praise of the three nominees than questions were asked of them by the few senators who bothered to show up. Yet some exchanges - particularly ones between Vermont Sen. Patrick Leahy, the committee chairman, and Judge Gregory - bear noting.

Mr. Leahy asked Judge Gregory whether he would feel bound by Supreme Court precedents. The judge said he would feel so bound - by not only Supreme Court decisions but also those of his own court. That answer was unexceptional. But, surely, it must give Democrats pause, since it suggests that a judge originally chosen by Mr. Clinton isn't likely to shift the balance of power on one of the more conservative appeals courts.

Mr. Leahy also inquired about statutory interpretation, asking whether the judge would consult "legislative history." Judge Gregory proceeded to say nothing about legislative history but emphasized that he would follow "the plain English" of the law - the text as written.

Sen. Leahy didn't attempt to pursue the issue, even though he couldn't have missed that Judge Gregory had just given an answer that could have been supplied by, well, Justice Antonin Scalia.

Justice Scalia disdains resorting to legislative history, because doing so encourages judges to expand their power and effectively write new laws. He insists, more strongly than any judge anywhere, on a textual approach to statutory interpretation. Justice Scalia, whom Mr. Bush held up during the campaign as a prime example of the kind of judge he would nominate, is precisely the kind of jurist Democrats like Sen. Leahy wish most fervently not to see appointed to any court.

It is a mistake, of course, to make too much of such exchanges. But the ones between Judge Gregory and Mr. Leahy were amusing at the least, and you can bet that if a genuine Bush nominee were to give the answers the judge gave, particularly on statutory interpretation, there would be more than a few follow-up questions asked by the Democrats.

All of which is to say no one should be fooled by the placid (and short) hearing. Last Thursday, all three nominees won committee approval by a 19-0 vote. But there will be hearings for plainly conservative judicial nominees, and fights over some of them remain quite likely.

The Choice Is Theirs

said choice was one of the "fundamental issues" about which he and the Bush team disagreed. With Jeffords' switch, Democrats took control of Senate committees -- a change that the Feminist Majority Foundation says "will be crucial to reproductive rights, as pro-choice Democrats will replace anti-choice Republicans." So, choice is safer today, right?

In some critical ways, yes. The Bush team's biggest fear is that Democrats will hold up key appointments -- especially confirmations to the judiciary. The Democratic leadership could do to the Republicans what Sen. Trent Lott did to the Clinton administration for eight years: simply refuse to bring nominations up for a vote. But there's reason to believe they won't. For all their fighting words, the Democrats confirmed Ted Olson -- a conservative attorney who has fought aggressively against women's rights and affirmative action -- as solicitor general. The Democrats had the power to filibuster Olson's confirmation (the vote was tight: 51 to 47), but the party leadership decided not to act. Conciliation was the better part of valor, they explained.

And that's how choice could fall victim to Capitol Hill brinkmanship. Focused on the Supreme Court, Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle likely will let lesser appointments slide by. But talk to abortion providers, and you find that those appointments are often where the real action is. It's at the local level that anti-Roe folks can pull the plug on women's rights -- to little fanfare but maximum effect.

Consider the case of Denise O'Donnell. For the past two and a half years, O'Donnell, as U.S. attorney for the Western District of New York, pursued the killer of Buffalo obstetrician Barnett Slepian. After a complicated international investigation, police in France finally arrested James Charles Kopp, the alleged assassin. On May 4, O'Donnell's office filed papers seeking Kopp's extradition to New York to stand trial. Since France does not extradite suspects who face capital punishment, Attorney General John Ashcroft had to assure French government officials that prosecutors would not seek to execute Kopp, who faces a state murder charge and the additional charge of violating the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act (FACE). A decision on extradition is due June 28.

In New York, federal prosecutors picked up Loretta Claire Marra and Dennis John Malvasi of Brooklyn, and charged them with aiding the fugitive Kopp. Eleanor Smeal of the Feminist Majority Foundation told Women's Enews that if O'Donnell hadn't spearheaded the case, Kopp might never have been caught. In her investigation of Slepian's murder, O'Donnell made crucial, political choices to cast a wide net in the belief that Kopp didn't act alone. In doing so, she trailed Kopp and his associates across the Atlantic and brought what Smeal calls an "international anti-choice conspiracy" to light.

York Times

But O'Donnell won't be on hand to prosecute, if and when the Kopp case finally makes it to court. On March 15, George W. Bush demanded her resignation in the middle of her four-year term. She vacated her office on May 31.

U.S. attorneys, appointed by the president, generally tender their resignations when a new administration takes office. But there have been exceptions. In O'Donnell's case, both New York Sens. Hillary Clinton and Chuck Schumer asked the White House to permit O'Donnell to complete her term. No dice. Although no new nominee has been named yet, the most likely replacement is a conservative Republican judge currently on the state family court. Kathleen M. Mehlretter, the district's former deputy attorney, is temporarily filling the post.

If the Democrats are out for "conciliation," it's unlikely that they will deem the U.S. attorney post serious enough to merit a grand fight. But for beleaguered abortion providers, the U.S. attorney is all-important. By enforcing clinic protection laws like FACE, O'Donnell made it possible for people like Marilyn Buckham, the administrator of the clinic where Slepian worked, to concentrate on providing health care, instead of having to focus on raising millions of dollars for clinic repairs, staff protection and lawsuits simply to get criminals into court. As Buckham told Women's Enews in May: "For what we went through, thank God it was under the [Clinton] administration."

National pro-choice groups usually confine their work to electing pro-choice candidates and lobbying against abortion restrictions and anti-choice Supreme Court justices. As critical as Washington is, the spotlight on federal judicial nominations obscures another crucial area in the fight for choice -- one much closer to home.

Schumer sits on the Senate Judiciary Committee. Maybe he and his colleagues will be able to block the incoming U.S. attorney candidate and demand O'Donnell's reinstatement. That will depend on whether Democratic leaders consider the post important enough -- and how much heat they get from their constituents.

Senate Approves Federal Judges

By Jesse Holland
Associated Press
Friday, July 20, 2001

After a yearlong battle, the Senate confirmed Roger Gregory on Friday as the first black federal appeals court judge in the district that represents a higher percentage of minorities than any other in the nation.

It took two presidents, three senators and several deals to permanently integrate the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, a southern circuit serving Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina, West Virginia and Maryland.

Gregory's district has 22 percent minorities, the highest percentage in the nation.

"It always speaks well when the courts are reflective of all that America has, but the most important thing is that judges serve with integrity and competence in every regard," he said after the Senate confirmed him to a lifetime appointment, 93-1.

Gregory watched the action from his home in Richmond, Va., more than a year after Sen. John Warner, R-Va., and then-Sen. Charles Robb, D-Va., said they would submit his name for the federal appeals court. "It feels good to finally have it over," Gregory said.

Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., voted against Gregory because then-President Clinton appointed him to the court on a temporary basis last December while the GOP-controlled Senate was in recess, said spokesman Ron Bonjean.

The Senate unanimously approved two U.S. District Court judges, Sam Haddon and Richard Cebull, both of Montana.

The federal judiciary has been a flash point between Republicans and Democrats, and Gregory's confirmation illustrated the machinations that have gone on in the Capitol.

Last year, Democrats accused Republicans of blocking Clinton's judicial nominees out of hope that a GOP president would win the November election. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., for example, stopped several North Carolina nominees for Gregory's seat by using a senatorial prerogative that lets senators bar nominees from their state.

Helms was retaliating for Democrats blocking his nominee, U.S. District Judge Terrance Boyle, from that seat when the first President Bush was in office. "For more than 15 months, he was never accorded the courtesy of a hearing," Helms wrote in June. "Thus, North Carolina continues the distinction of never having had a Republican judge on the Fourth Circuit since the honorable John J. Parker was nominated by President Coolidge."

To get around Helms, Clinton tapped Gregory of Virginia in June 2000 after getting support from Robb and Warner. However, the GOP-controlled Senate refused to give Gregory a hearing last year, leading Clinton to give him the temporary appointment.

Bush won the presidency and withdrew all of Clinton's still unconfirmed nominees, including Gregory. But with the Senate split 50-50 giving Democrats enough members to filibuster any nominee _ Bush renominated Gregory as one of his first 11 judicial nominees.

GOP Sen. George Allen of Virginia, who defeated Robb in that election, immediately backed Gregory.

"I asked my colleagues, and indeed the president, to not view Roger Gregory based upon the former president's political manipulations," Allen said.

Bush also renominated Boyle, and Republicans linked the nominations of Boyle and Gregory to prevent Democrats from sinking Boyle again. But then the Senate was taken over by the Democrats, who separated the two and made Gregory their first order of business.

"Mr. Gregory and many, many others have languished not only for months, but in some cases for years," said Senate Majority Leader Thomas Daschle, D-S.D. "And so in order to rectify that we put a very high priority on Mr. Gregory's confirmation."

Republicans now complain that Democrats are delaying Bush's other nominees and have threatened to hold bills hostage unless executive and judicial nominations get faster action. The GOP says their tactics have forced Democrats to move more than 70 executive and departmental nominees through in the last two weeks.

However, the judicial war isn't over. Three other Appeals Court nominees Jeff Sutton, Miguel Estrada and Michael McConnell have organized resistance against them.

The federal court system has 107 vacancies, and 25 Bush nominees have yet to receive hearings by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The battle over the 15-seat 4th Circuit isn't over either. Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., has threatened to block Boyle's nomination unless Bush renominates one of the judges Helms blocked earlier.

Senators Confirm 3 Judges, Including Once-Stalled Black

By Alison Mitchell

The New York Times

Saturday, July 21, 2001

The Senate confirmed federal judges today for the first time since the Democrats took control in May, including Roger Gregory, who was initially named to the bench by President Bill Clinton in a recess appointment after the Republican-run Senate stalled his nomination.

Mr. Gregory, who was approved 94 to 1, is the first black judge to serve on the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, which covers Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia. Senator Trent Lott of Mississippi, the Republican leader, cast the lone vote against him.

Blacks make up 22 percent of the circuit's population, a figure higher than in any other federal jurisdiction. Mr. Clinton nominated four black judges to the Fourth Circuit but not one was granted a hearing. Mr. Gregory, a corporate lawyer in Richmond, Va., was nominated in June 2000.

Before leaving office, Mr. Clinton angered some Republicans by giving Mr. Gregory a temporary appointment to the court after the Senate adjourned for the year. Such a recess appointee is allowed to serve just one year. President Bush -- whose attorney general, John Ashcroft, came under fire in his nominations hearings for blocking a black nominee for the federal court -- renominated Mr. Gregory for a lifetime appointment in May.

"This makes a statement, I think, that is very important," Senator Tom Daschle of South Dakota, the majority leader, said today in praising both Mr. Clinton and Mr. Bush.

Virginia's two senators, John W. Warner and George F. Allen, both Republicans, called for Mr. Gregory's approval today, with Mr. Warner saying, "We are at a historic moment here with Judge Gregory."

Mr. Allen said Mr. Gregory, who had been the first person in his family to finish high school, had an "inspirational story" and a "proper judicial philosophy." He asked fellow Republicans not to view the nominee "based upon the former president's political manipulations."

Ronald D. Bonjean Jr., a spokesman for Mr. Lott, said Mr. Lott's opposition to Mr. Gregory was "an institutional decision" designed to protect Senate prerogatives and underscore his stance that "any appointment of federal judges during a recess should be opposed."

The Senate today also confirmed two other Bush nominees, Sam Haddon and Richard Cebull, as federal district judges in Montana.

The confirmation of federal judges and the ideological makeup of the courts has been a flash point between the two parties, and some of Mr. Bush's more conservative nominees are expected to have a rough time before a Democratic-led Senate.

Protesting that Democrats planned to block judges because of ideology, Republicans held up the full reorganization of the Senate under Democratic control for about a month late this spring in an effort to win a promise that all nominees for the Supreme Court would get a Senate floor vote, no matter how the Senate Judiciary Committee ruled on them.

Senate Confirms 3 Bush Judges; GOP Procedural Tactics Clear Way For Spending Bill Votes

By Audrey Hudson

The Senate yesterday approved President Bush's first batch of judicial nominees, and Majority Leader Tom Daschle pledged to speed up executive nominees stalled in the Democrat-controlled body.

Roger Gregory was approved 93-1 to a permanent seat on the U.S. Appeals Court, with Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, as the lone dissenter. Sam Haddon was approved 95-0 to the U.S. District Court in Montana, and Richard Cebull was approved 93-0 to the same bench.

Both Republicans and Democrats praised the confirmation of Judge Gregory, who was first nominated by President Clinton last year, but blocked by Republicans. Mr. Clinton bypassed the Senate and installed Judge Gregory to the bench during a December congressional recess.

Judge Gregory was appointed to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The panel hears cases from Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat and chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said Judge Gregory is "one of the few nominees ever nominated by presidents of different parties."

"President Bush deserves credit for renominating Judge Gregory and allowing the Senate a third chance to consider and confirm this outstanding nominee," Mr. Leahy said.

"We are at a historic moment here with Judge Gregory," said Sen. John W. Warner, Virginia Republican.

Sen. George F. Allen, Virginia Republican, asked his colleagues not to view Judge Gregory based upon the former president's "political manipulations."

In his first Senate floor speech earlier this year, Mr. Allen asked that Judge Gregory be judged "on the basis of his qualifications."

Mr. Lott opposed Judge Gregory's nomination because he opposes all recess appointments, said Ron Bonjean, Mr. Lott's spokesman.

Senate Republicans have employed procedural stalling tactics on spending bills to force Democratic leaders to speed up the confirmation process.

Republicans were successful in getting 74 nominees confirmed in seven legislative days but have lists of more than 100 names still awaiting hearings and votes.

In exchange for the judicial nominee votes and 18 executive nominees approved late Thursday,

Republicans allowed the Senate to proceed with three spending bills.

One Republican aide compared the tactic to a pace car allowing a race to begin.

Republicans stalled Senate business all day Thursday while negotiations continued over the nominees - frustrating Democrats in the process.

The strategy to link spending bills to nominees is necessary to get the process moving, Republicans said, and is endorsed by Mr. Lott.

"All I say to Democrats is: Welcome to the majority. This is what the minority does to the majority," Mr. Lott told reporters Thursday.

Despite the "tremendous amount of unfairness associated with the consideration of Clinton nominees" under Republican rule, Mr. Daschle said Democrats will be "fair" with Mr. Bush's nominees.

"The nomination process is going to be the subject, of course, of a great deal of debate," said Mr. Daschle of South Dakota.

"And I don't know what the total number will be, but over the course of the next week or so, we will have dozens more. And we'll continue to press to try to complete our work," Mr. Daschle said.

However, Mr. Daschle said senators have a right to "express themselves and use whatever parliamentary devices if they feel there is justifiable need for opposition."

Mr. Leahy said the delay in confirming judicial nominees was due to the reorganization of the Senate from Republican to Democratic control when Sen. James M. Jeffords of Vermont switched from the Republican Party to become an independent.

"I am sorry that we lost the month of June to the process of reorganizing the Senate, but I am proud of the very quick start that the committee has gotten on holding hearings and reporting nominees," Mr. Leahy said.

Senate Confirms 3 Of Bush's Judicial Nominees; Courts: Choice For 4th Circuit - - Named To The Post Temporarily By Clinton - -Is The Bench's First Black Member

By David Savage

President Bush won Senate confirmation of his first judges Friday, but the victory was celebrated more by liberal activists and Democrats than by the administration's conservative supporters.

Judge Roger Gregory, an African American lawyer from Richmond, Va., won Senate approval to a permanent judgeship on the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, a year after President Clinton nominated him to the same post.

The Senate also confirmed two trial court judges from Montana: Sam Haddon and Richard Cebull.

Despite Friday's vote, 109 vacancies remain on the federal bench, and the Senate is not expected to vote on more of Bush's court nominees until the fall.

Administration officials say they are frustrated at the slow pace of confirmations, and conservative activist Tom Jipping accused the Democrats of following "an aggressive obstructionist strategy."

"I hope the Democrats don't think they are fooling anyone with this [vote]. It shows only that they will not fight a Clinton nominee who is black," said Jipping, a lawyer for the Free Congress Foundation.

Meanwhile, the liberal Alliance for Justice said it was pleased with Gregory's confirmation to the conservative appeals court, which had been all white.

"This sends the right signal, that if you nominate judges who are not out of step with the concerns of average Americans, they will be confirmed," said Marcia Kuntz, who heads the alliance's judicial selection project.

Gregory won confirmation on a 94-1 vote, with only Trent Lott of Mississippi, the Republican leader, voting no.

But the lopsided approval of Gregory as the first Bush judge masks an ongoing political struggle and makes for a strange twist in the political battles over the courts.

Throughout Clinton's term, he tried to add the first black jurist to the 15-member 4th Circuit Court. Its region, which extends from Maryland to South Carolina, has the highest percentage of African Americans of any federal circuit, yet it was the only appeals court that had never had a minority judge.

Four of its judgeships were authorized to be filled by North Carolinians, but Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) vetoed three of Clinton's black nominees. They were denied hearings in the Senate Judiciary Committee, leaving North Carolina with no representation on the appeals court.

With his time in the White House running out, Clinton last year looked to Virginia. Gregory had been a protege of former Virginia Gov. L. Douglas Wilder, and he was supported by the state's two U.S. senators, including Republican John W. Warner.

Despite that support, the Republican-controlled Senate took no action on Gregory's nomination last year.

Undaunted, Clinton, while the Senate was in recess, appointed Gregory to the appeals court for a one-year term.

When Bush moved into the White House, he decided in a bipartisan gesture to renominate Gregory in his first batch of court picks. And when the Democrats retook control the Senate in May, they decided to move first on Gregory.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), who became chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said the Bush White House and the Senate Republicans deserve much of the blame for the slow start on approving judges.

Bush's lawyers changed the long-standing practice of having the American Bar Assn. conduct a semiofficial review of judicial candidates before they were nominated. But Senate Democrats insisted on those reviews, which were done after the nominations were announced.

In June, after losing control of the Senate, the Republicans sought new rules that would clear the way for a full Senate vote on all nominations. The Democrats refused, saying they would follow the same rules the Republicans used when they were in the majority.

Leahy said again Friday that he has no intention of blocking Bush's judicial nominees but that those with bipartisan support will move first.

"The Senate can act promptly on consensus nominees," Leahy said. If presidential nominees are supported by home-state Democrats as well as by Republicans, they are likely to win quick approval, he said.

Typically, new administrations get off to a slow start in filling court vacancies, but Bush's aides say the Democrats are stalling for no good reason.

"This is totally unprecedented, and there is a high level of irritation over it," said one administration official who asked not to be named.

Bush's advisors say Clinton judges won Senate confirmation, on average, 81 days after they were nominated. This was so, they said, despite yearlong delays for several nominees.

They say the Senate is behind schedule on their nominees already, as only three judges have been approved in the 72 days since Bush sent his first nominees to Capitol Hill.

But David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy, said those numbers ignore that the first year of an administration is always slow going.

"Clinton had only four appeals court judges confirmed in his first year, and Bush senior had only five," he said.

Op/Eds

Bush Shows His Arrogance

By P.K. Cranford
The Arkansas Democrat-Gazette
Friday, July 20, 2001

I find it so disingenuous of letter writer Ronald Stanley to claim that George W. Bush has reached across party lines in a show of bipartisanship and to complain that the Democrats are holding up Bush's judicial nominees in a display of partisanship. Since taking office, Bush has demonstrated an arrogant "my way or the highway" attitude. He has shown no effort toward being bipartisan--at least, not before the James Jeffords defection. After nine years of the vicious partisanship displayed by the Republican Party, what does Stanley expect? For years, Bill Clinton's judicial nominees were held up in committee and not even allowed to come to the floor for a vote. That is the reason for the vacancies in federal judgeships our nation is now experiencing. Had the Republicans been more inclined to allow Clinton's nominees a vote, the Democrats would probably be more inclined to give Bush the same consideration. I have a feeling judicial nominations not getting to the floor for a vote won't be the only brick wall Dubya crashes into during the next loooong three years. Remember, what goes around comes around and usually picks up speed along the way. And to letter writer H.D. Flanders of Hot Springs, bravo. I couldn't agree more.

The Hill Hearing That Didn't Bark

For some months now, the basic story line on President Bush's effort to choose judges for the federal bench has been that it will meet resistance from Senate Democrats - so much that fights, perhaps even ones approaching Borkean intensity, are inevitable.

Indeed, in seeming preparation for such battles, a Judiciary Committee subcommittee led by New York Sen. Charles Schumer recently commenced a series of hearings on such questions as the role of ideology in judicial selection. Earlier this month, however, Mr. Schumer and his Democratic colleagues on the Judiciary Committee decided to conduct their first hearing for Bush judicial nominees, three in all. Let the record show that, though the hearing room was packed with partisans from both sides of the judicial divide, a fight didn't break out.

The reason one didn't was apparent, for Senate Democrats had decided to open with entirely noncontroversial nominees. Two are nominees for district judgeships (choices for district courts almost never are contested) in a state, Montana, where there is a palpable need for such judges. (Montana is entitled to three district judges, and only one currently is sitting, no doubt exhausted.)

The other nominee is Judge Roger Gregory, whom Bill Clinton named a year ago to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. With Republicans refusing to hold a hearing on Mr. Gregory, Mr. Clinton appointed him in December when the Senate was in recess. Judge Gregory, whose temporary appointment will expire at year's end, was the Democrats' leading example of a nominee wrongly blocked by Senate Republicans. In a move designed to placate Democrats and improve confirmation prospects for subsequent nominees, President Bush included the judge among his first selections, thus making him one of the few people ever to have been chosen for the same bench by presidents of different political parties.

More was said in praise of the three nominees than questions were asked of them by the few senators who bothered to show up. Yet some exchanges - particularly ones between Vermont Sen. Patrick Leahy, the committee chairman, and Judge Gregory - bear noting.

Mr. Leahy asked Judge Gregory whether he would feel bound by Supreme Court precedents. The judge said he would feel so bound - by not only Supreme Court decisions but also those of his own court. That answer was unexceptional. But, surely, it must give Democrats pause, since it suggests that a judge originally chosen by Mr. Clinton isn't likely to shift the balance of power on one of the more conservative appeals courts.

Mr. Leahy also inquired about statutory interpretation, asking whether the judge would consult "legislative history." Judge Gregory proceeded to say nothing about legislative history but emphasized that he would follow "the plain English" of the law - the text as written.

Sen. Leahy didn't attempt to pursue the issue, even though he couldn't have missed that Judge Gregory had just given an answer that could have been supplied by, well, Justice Antonin Scalia.

Justice Scalia disdains resorting to legislative history, because doing so encourages judges to expand their power and effectively write new laws. He insists, more strongly than any judge anywhere, on a textual approach to statutory interpretation. Justice Scalia, whom Mr. Bush held up during the campaign as a prime example of the kind of judge he would nominate, is precisely the kind of jurist Democrats like Sen. Leahy wish most fervently not to see appointed to any court.

It is a mistake, of course, to make too much of such exchanges. But the ones between Judge Gregory and Mr. Leahy were amusing at the least, and you can bet that if a genuine Bush nominee were to give the answers the judge gave, particularly on statutory interpretation, there would be more than a few follow-up questions asked by the Democrats.

All of which is to say no one should be fooled by the placid (and short) hearing. Last Thursday, all three nominees won committee approval by a 19-0 vote. But there will be hearings for plainly conservative judicial nominees, and fights over some of them remain quite likely.

The Choice Is Theirs

said choice was one of the "fundamental issues" about which he and the Bush team disagreed. With Jeffords' switch, Democrats took control of Senate committees -- a change that the Feminist Majority Foundation says "will be crucial to reproductive rights, as pro-choice Democrats will replace anti-choice Republicans." So, choice is safer today, right?

In some critical ways, yes. The Bush team's biggest fear is that Democrats will hold up key appointments -- especially confirmations to the judiciary. The Democratic leadership could do to the Republicans what Sen. Trent Lott did to the Clinton administration for eight years: simply refuse to bring nominations up for a vote. But there's reason to believe they won't. For all their fighting words, the Democrats confirmed Ted Olson -- a conservative attorney who has fought aggressively against women's rights and affirmative action -- as solicitor general. The Democrats had the power to filibuster Olson's confirmation (the vote was tight: 51 to 47), but the party leadership decided not to act. Conciliation was the better part of valor, they explained.

And that's how choice could fall victim to Capitol Hill brinkmanship. Focused on the Supreme Court, Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle likely will let lesser appointments slide by. But talk to abortion providers, and you find that those appointments are often where the real action is. It's at the local level that anti-Roe folks can pull the plug on women's rights -- to little fanfare but maximum effect.

Consider the case of Denise O'Donnell. For the past two and a half years, O'Donnell, as U.S. attorney for the Western District of New York, pursued the killer of Buffalo obstetrician Barnett Slepian. After a complicated international investigation, police in France finally arrested James Charles Kopp, the alleged assassin. On May 4, O'Donnell's office filed papers seeking Kopp's extradition to New York to stand trial. Since France does not extradite suspects who face capital punishment, Attorney General John Ashcroft had to assure French government officials that prosecutors would not seek to execute Kopp, who faces a state murder charge and the additional charge of violating the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act (FACE). A decision on extradition is due June 28.

In New York, federal prosecutors picked up Loretta Claire Marra and Dennis John Malvasi of Brooklyn, and charged them with aiding the fugitive Kopp. Eleanor Smeal of the Feminist Majority Foundation told Women's Enews that if O'Donnell hadn't spearheaded the case, Kopp might never have been caught. In her investigation of Slepian's murder, O'Donnell made crucial,

York Times

Neil Lewis New York Times

Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis

political choices to cast a wide net in the belief that Kopp didn't act alone. In doing so, she trailed Kopp and his associates across the Atlantic and brought what Smeal calls an "international anti-choice conspiracy" to light.

But O'Donnell won't be on hand to prosecute, if and when the Kopp case finally makes it to court. On March 15, George W. Bush demanded her resignation in the middle of her four-year term. She vacated her office on May 31.

U.S. attorneys, appointed by the president, generally tender their resignations when a new administration takes office. But there have been exceptions. In O'Donnell's case, both New York Sens. Hillary Clinton and Chuck Schumer asked the White House to permit O'Donnell to complete her term. No dice. Although no new nominee has been named yet, the most likely replacement is a conservative Republican judge currently on the state family court. Kathleen M. Mehlretter, the district's former deputy attorney, is temporarily filling the post.

If the Democrats are out for "conciliation," it's unlikely that they will deem the U.S. attorney post serious enough to merit a grand fight. But for beleaguered abortion providers, the U.S. attorney is all-important. By enforcing clinic protection laws like FACE, O'Donnell made it possible for people like Marilyn Buckham, the administrator of the clinic where Slepian worked, to concentrate on providing health care, instead of having to focus on raising millions of dollars for clinic repairs, staff protection and lawsuits simply to get criminals into court. As Buckham told Women's Enews in May: "For what we went through, thank God it was under the [Clinton] administration."

National pro-choice groups usually confine their work to electing pro-choice candidates and lobbying against abortion restrictions and anti-choice Supreme Court justices. As critical as Washington is, the spotlight on federal judicial nominations obscures another crucial area in the fight for choice -- one much closer to home.

Schumer sits on the Senate Judiciary Committee. Maybe he and his colleagues will be able to block the incoming U.S. attorney candidate and demand O'Donnell's reinstatement. That will depend on whether Democratic leaders consider the post important enough -- and how much heat they get from their constituents.

Senate Approves Federal Judges

By Jesse Holland
Associated Press
Friday, July 20, 2001

After a yearlong battle, the Senate confirmed Roger Gregory on Friday as the first black federal appeals court judge in the district that represents a higher percentage of minorities than any other in the nation.

It took two presidents, three senators and several deals to permanently integrate the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, a southern circuit serving Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina, West Virginia and Maryland.

Gregory's district has 22 percent minorities, the highest percentage in the nation.

"It always speaks well when the courts are reflective of all that America has, but the most important thing is that judges serve with integrity and competence in every regard," he said after the Senate confirmed him to a lifetime appointment, 93-1.

Gregory watched the action from his home in Richmond, Va., more than a year after Sen. John Warner, R-Va., and then-Sen. Charles Robb, D-Va., said they would submit his name for the federal appeals court. "It feels good to finally have it over," Gregory said.

Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., voted against Gregory because then-President Clinton appointed him to the court on a temporary basis last December while the GOP-controlled Senate was in recess, said spokesman Ron Bonjean.

The Senate unanimously approved two U.S. District Court judges, Sam Haddon and Richard Cebull, both of Montana.

The federal judiciary has been a flash point between Republicans and Democrats, and Gregory's confirmation illustrated the machinations that have gone on in the Capitol.

Last year, Democrats accused Republicans of blocking Clinton's judicial nominees out of hope that a GOP president would win the November election. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., for example, stopped several North Carolina nominees for Gregory's seat by using a senatorial prerogative that lets senators bar nominees from their state.

Helms was retaliating for Democrats blocking his nominee, U.S. District Judge Terrance Boyle, from that seat when the first President Bush was in office. "For more than 15 months, he was never accorded the courtesy of a hearing," Helms wrote in June. "Thus, North Carolina continues the distinction of never having had a Republican judge on the Fourth Circuit since the honorable John J. Parker was nominated by President Coolidge."

To get around Helms, Clinton tapped Gregory of Virginia in June 2000 after getting support from Robb and Warner. However, the GOP-controlled Senate refused to give Gregory a hearing last year, leading Clinton to give him the temporary appointment.

Bush won the presidency and withdrew all of Clinton's still unconfirmed nominees, including Gregory. But with the Senate split 50-50 giving Democrats enough members to filibuster any nominee _ Bush renominated Gregory as one of his first 11 judicial nominees.

GOP Sen. George Allen of Virginia, who defeated Robb in that election, immediately backed Gregory.

"I asked my colleagues, and indeed the president, to not view Roger Gregory based upon the former president's political manipulations," Allen said.

Bush also renominated Boyle, and Republicans linked the nominations of Boyle and Gregory to prevent Democrats from sinking Boyle again. But then the Senate was taken over by the Democrats, who separated the two and made Gregory their first order of business.

"Mr. Gregory and many, many others have languished not only for months, but in some cases for years," said Senate Majority Leader Thomas Daschle, D-S.D. "And so in order to rectify that we put a very high priority on Mr. Gregory's confirmation."

Republicans now complain that Democrats are delaying Bush's other nominees and have threatened to hold bills hostage unless executive and judicial nominations get faster action. The GOP says their tactics have forced Democrats to move more than 70 executive and departmental nominees through in the last two weeks.

However, the judicial war isn't over. Three other Appeals Court nominees Jeff Sutton, Miguel Estrada and Michael McConnell have organized resistance against them.

The federal court system has 107 vacancies, and 25 Bush nominees have yet to receive hearings by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The battle over the 15-seat 4th Circuit isn't over either. Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., has threatened to block Boyle's nomination unless Bush renominates one of the judges Helms blocked earlier.

Senators Confirm 3 Judges, Including Once-Stalled Black

By Alison Mitchell

The New York Times

Saturday, July 21, 2001

The Senate confirmed federal judges today for the first time since the Democrats took control in May, including Roger Gregory, who was initially named to the bench by President Bill Clinton in a recess appointment after the Republican-run Senate stalled his nomination.

Mr. Gregory, who was approved 94 to 1, is the first black judge to serve on the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, which covers Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia. Senator Trent Lott of Mississippi, the Republican leader, cast the lone vote against him.

Blacks make up 22 percent of the circuit's population, a figure higher than in any other federal jurisdiction. Mr. Clinton nominated four black judges to the Fourth Circuit but not one was granted a hearing. Mr. Gregory, a corporate lawyer in Richmond, Va., was nominated in June 2000.

Before leaving office, Mr. Clinton angered some Republicans by giving Mr. Gregory a temporary appointment to the court after the Senate adjourned for the year. Such a recess appointee is allowed to serve just one year. President Bush -- whose attorney general, John Ashcroft, came under fire in his nominations hearings for blocking a black nominee for the federal court -- renominated Mr. Gregory for a lifetime appointment in May.

"This makes a statement, I think, that is very important," Senator Tom Daschle of South Dakota, the majority leader, said today in praising both Mr. Clinton and Mr. Bush.

Virginia's two senators, John W. Warner and George F. Allen, both Republicans, called for Mr. Gregory's approval today, with Mr. Warner saying, "We are at a historic moment here with Judge Gregory."

Mr. Allen said Mr. Gregory, who had been the first person in his family to finish high school, had an "inspirational story" and a "proper judicial philosophy." He asked fellow Republicans not to view the nominee "based upon the former president's political manipulations."

Ronald D. Bonjean Jr., a spokesman for Mr. Lott, said Mr. Lott's opposition to Mr. Gregory was "an institutional decision" designed to protect Senate prerogatives and underscore his stance that "any appointment of federal judges during a recess should be opposed."

The Senate today also confirmed two other Bush nominees, Sam Haddon and Richard Cebull, as federal district judges in Montana.

The confirmation of federal judges and the ideological makeup of the courts has been a flash point between the two parties, and some of Mr. Bush's more conservative nominees are expected to have a rough time before a Democratic-led Senate.

Protesting that Democrats planned to block judges because of ideology, Republicans held up the full reorganization of the Senate under Democratic control for about a month late this spring in an effort to win a promise that all nominees for the Supreme Court would get a Senate floor vote, no matter how the Senate Judiciary Committee ruled on them.

Senate Confirms 3 Bush Judges; GOP Procedural Tactics Clear Way For Spending Bill Votes

By Audrey Hudson
The Washington Times
Saturday, July 21, 2001

The Senate yesterday approved President Bush's first batch of judicial nominees, and Majority Leader Tom Daschle pledged to speed up executive nominees stalled in the Democrat-controlled body.

Roger Gregory was approved 93-1 to a permanent seat on the U.S. Appeals Court, with Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, as the lone dissenter. Sam Haddon was approved 95-0 to the U.S. District Court in Montana, and Richard Cebull was approved 93-0 to the same bench.

Both Republicans and Democrats praised the confirmation of Judge Gregory, who was first nominated by President Clinton last year, but blocked by Republicans. Mr. Clinton bypassed the Senate and installed Judge Gregory to the bench during a December congressional recess.

Judge Gregory was appointed to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The panel hears cases from Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat and chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said Judge Gregory is "one of the few nominees ever nominated by presidents of different parties."

"President Bush deserves credit for renominating Judge Gregory and allowing the Senate a third chance to consider and confirm this outstanding nominee," Mr. Leahy said.

"We are at a historic moment here with Judge Gregory," said Sen. John W. Warner, Virginia Republican.

Sen. George F. Allen, Virginia Republican, asked his colleagues not to view Judge Gregory based upon the former president's "political manipulations."

In his first Senate floor speech earlier this year, Mr. Allen asked that Judge Gregory be judged "on the basis of his qualifications."

Mr. Lott opposed Judge Gregory's nomination because he opposes all recess appointments, said Ron Bonjean, Mr. Lott's spokesman.

Senate Republicans have employed procedural stalling tactics on spending bills to force Democratic leaders to speed up the confirmation process.

Republicans were successful in getting 74 nominees confirmed in seven legislative days but have lists of more than 100 names still awaiting hearings and votes.

In exchange for the judicial nominee votes and 18 executive nominees approved late Thursday,

Republicans allowed the Senate to proceed with three spending bills.

One Republican aide compared the tactic to a pace car allowing a race to begin.

Republicans stalled Senate business all day Thursday while negotiations continued over the nominees - frustrating Democrats in the process.

The strategy to link spending bills to nominees is necessary to get the process moving, Republicans said, and is endorsed by Mr. Lott.

"All I say to Democrats is: Welcome to the majority. This is what the minority does to the majority," Mr. Lott told reporters Thursday.

Despite the "tremendous amount of unfairness associated with the consideration of Clinton nominees" under Republican rule, Mr. Daschle said Democrats will be "fair" with Mr. Bush's nominees.

"The nomination process is going to be the subject, of course, of a great deal of debate," said Mr. Daschle of South Dakota.

"And I don't know what the total number will be, but over the course of the next week or so, we will have dozens more. And we'll continue to press to try to complete our work," Mr. Daschle said.

However, Mr. Daschle said senators have a right to "express themselves and use whatever parliamentary devices if they feel there is justifiable need for opposition."

Mr. Leahy said the delay in confirming judicial nominees was due to the reorganization of the Senate from Republican to Democratic control when Sen. James M. Jeffords of Vermont switched from the Republican Party to become an independent.

"I am sorry that we lost the month of June to the process of reorganizing the Senate, but I am proud of the very quick start that the committee has gotten on holding hearings and reporting nominees," Mr. Leahy said.

Senate Confirms 3 Of Bush's Judicial Nominees; Courts: Choice For 4th Circuit - - Named To The Post Temporarily By Clinton - -Is The Bench's First Black Member

By David Savage
The Los Angeles Times
Saturday, July 21, 2001

President Bush won Senate confirmation of his first judges Friday, but the victory was celebrated more by liberal activists and Democrats than by the administration's conservative supporters.

Judge Roger Gregory, an African American lawyer from Richmond, Va., won Senate approval to a permanent judgeship on the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, a year after President Clinton nominated him to the same post.

The Senate also confirmed two trial court judges from Montana: Sam Haddon and Richard Cebull.

Despite Friday's vote, 109 vacancies remain on the federal bench, and the Senate is not expected to vote on more of Bush's court nominees until the fall.

Administration officials say they are frustrated at the slow pace of confirmations, and conservative activist Tom Jipping accused the Democrats of following "an aggressive obstructionist strategy."

"I hope the Democrats don't think they are fooling anyone with this [vote]. It shows only that they will not fight a Clinton nominee who is black," said Jipping, a lawyer for the Free Congress Foundation.

Meanwhile, the liberal Alliance for Justice said it was pleased with Gregory's confirmation to the conservative appeals court, which had been all white.

"This sends the right signal, that if you nominate judges who are not out of step with the concerns of average Americans, they will be confirmed," said Marcia Kuntz, who heads the alliance's judicial selection project.

Gregory won confirmation on a 94-1 vote, with only Trent Lott of Mississippi, the Republican leader, voting no.

But the lopsided approval of Gregory as the first Bush judge masks an ongoing political struggle and makes for a strange twist in the political battles over the courts.

Throughout Clinton's term, he tried to add the first black jurist to the 15-member 4th Circuit Court. Its region, which extends from Maryland to South Carolina, has the highest percentage of African Americans of any federal circuit, yet it was the only appeals court that had never had a minority judge.

Four of its judgeships were authorized to be filled by North Carolinians, but Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) vetoed three of Clinton's black nominees. They were denied hearings in the Senate Judiciary Committee, leaving North Carolina with no representation on the appeals court.

With his time in the White House running out, Clinton last year looked to Virginia. Gregory had been a protege of former Virginia Gov. L. Douglas Wilder, and he was supported by the state's two U.S. senators, including Republican John W. Warner.

Despite that support, the Republican-controlled Senate took no action on Gregory's nomination last year.

Undaunted, Clinton, while the Senate was in recess, appointed Gregory to the appeals court for a one-year term.

When Bush moved into the White House, he decided in a bipartisan gesture to renominate Gregory in his first batch of court picks. And when the Democrats retook control the Senate in May, they decided to move first on Gregory.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), who became chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said the Bush White House and the Senate Republicans deserve much of the blame for the slow start on approving judges.

Bush's lawyers changed the long-standing practice of having the American Bar Assn. conduct a semiofficial review of judicial candidates before they were nominated. But Senate Democrats insisted on those reviews, which were done after the nominations were announced.

In June, after losing control of the Senate, the Republicans sought new rules that would clear the way for a full Senate vote on all nominations. The Democrats refused, saying they would follow the same rules the Republicans used when they were in the majority.

Leahy said again Friday that he has no intention of blocking Bush's judicial nominees but that those with bipartisan support will move first.

"The Senate can act promptly on consensus nominees," Leahy said. If presidential nominees are supported by home-state Democrats as well as by Republicans, they are likely to win quick approval, he said.

Typically, new administrations get off to a slow start in filling court vacancies, but Bush's aides say the Democrats are stalling for no good reason.

"This is totally unprecedented, and there is a high level of irritation over it," said one administration official who asked not to be named.

Bush's advisors say Clinton judges won Senate confirmation, on average, 81 days after they were nominated. This was so, they said, despite yearlong delays for several nominees.

They say the Senate is behind schedule on their nominees already, as only three judges have been approved in the 72 days since Bush sent his first nominees to Capitol Hill.

But David Carle, a spokesman for Leahy, said those numbers ignore that the first year of an administration is always slow going.

"Clinton had only four appeals court judges confirmed in his first year, and Bush senior had only five," he said.

Bush Shows His Arrogance

By P.K. Cranford
The Arkansas Democrat-Gazette
Friday, July 20, 2001

I find it so disingenuous of letter writer Ronald Stanley to claim that George W. Bush has reached across party lines in a show of bipartisanship and to complain that the Democrats are holding up Bush's judicial nominees in a display of partisanship. Since taking office, Bush has demonstrated an arrogant "my way or the highway" attitude. He has shown no effort toward being bipartisan--at least, not before the James Jeffords defection. After nine years of the vicious partisanship displayed by the Republican Party, what does Stanley expect? For years, Bill Clinton's judicial nominees were held up in committee and not even allowed to come to the floor for a vote. That is the reason for the vacancies in federal judgeships our nation is now experiencing. Had the Republicans been more inclined to allow Clinton's nominees a vote, the Democrats would probably be more inclined to give Bush the same consideration. I have a feeling judicial nominations not getting to the floor for a vote won't be the only brick wall Dubya crashes into during the next loooong three years. Remember, what goes around comes around and usually picks up speed along the way. And to letter writer H.D. Flanders of Hot Springs, bravo. I couldn't agree more.

For some months now, the basic story line on President Bush's effort to choose judges for the federal bench has been that it will meet resistance from Senate Democrats - so much that fights, perhaps even ones approaching Borkean intensity, are inevitable.

Indeed, in seeming preparation for such battles, a Judiciary Committee subcommittee led by New York Sen. Charles Schumer recently commenced a series of hearings on such questions as the role of ideology in judicial selection. Earlier this month, however, Mr. Schumer and his Democratic colleagues on the Judiciary Committee decided to conduct their first hearing for Bush judicial nominees, three in all. Let the record show that, though the hearing room was packed with partisans from both sides of the judicial divide, a fight didn't break out.

The reason one didn't was apparent, for Senate Democrats had decided to open with entirely noncontroversial nominees. Two are nominees for district judgeships (choices for district courts almost never are contested) in a state, Montana, where there is a palpable need for such judges. (Montana is entitled to three district judges, and only one currently is sitting, no doubt exhausted.)

The other nominee is Judge Roger Gregory, whom Bill Clinton named a year ago to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. With Republicans refusing to hold a hearing on Mr. Gregory, Mr. Clinton appointed him in December when the Senate was in recess. Judge Gregory, whose temporary appointment will expire at year's end, was the Democrats' leading example of a nominee wrongly blocked by Senate Republicans. In a move designed to placate Democrats and improve confirmation prospects for subsequent nominees, President Bush included the judge among his first selections, thus making him one of the few people ever to have been chosen for the same bench by presidents of different political parties.

More was said in praise of the three nominees than questions were asked of them by the few senators who bothered to show up. Yet some exchanges - particularly ones between Vermont Sen. Patrick Leahy, the committee chairman, and Judge Gregory - bear noting.

Mr. Leahy asked Judge Gregory whether he would feel bound by Supreme Court precedents. The judge said he would feel so bound - by not only Supreme Court decisions but also those of his own court. That answer was unexceptional. But, surely, it must give Democrats pause, since it suggests that a judge originally chosen by Mr. Clinton isn't likely to shift the balance of power on one of the more conservative appeals courts.

Mr. Leahy also inquired about statutory interpretation, asking whether the judge would consult "legislative history." Judge Gregory proceeded to say nothing about legislative history but emphasized that he would follow "the plain English" of the law - the text as written.

Sen. Leahy didn't attempt to pursue the issue, even though he couldn't have missed that Judge Gregory had just given an answer that could have been supplied by, well, Justice Antonin Scalia.

Justice Scalia disdains resorting to legislative history, because doing so encourages judges to expand their power and effectively write new laws. He insists, more strongly than any judge anywhere, on a textual approach to statutory interpretation. Justice Scalia, whom Mr. Bush held up during the campaign as a prime example of the kind of judge he would nominate, is precisely the kind of jurist Democrats like Sen. Leahy wish most fervently not to see appointed to any court.

It is a mistake, of course, to make too much of such exchanges. But the ones between Judge Gregory and Mr. Leahy were amusing at the least, and you can bet that if a genuine Bush nominee were to give the answers the judge gave, particularly on statutory interpretation, there would be more than a few follow-up questions asked by the Democrats.

All of which is to say no one should be fooled by the placid (and short) hearing. Last Thursday, all three nominees won committee approval by a 19-0 vote. But there will be hearings for plainly conservative judicial nominees, and fights over some of them remain quite likely.

The Choice Is Theirs

said choice was one of the "fundamental issues" about which he and the Bush team disagreed. With Jeffords' switch, Democrats took control of Senate committees -- a change that the Feminist Majority Foundation says "will be crucial to reproductive rights, as pro-choice Democrats will replace anti-choice Republicans." So, choice is safer today, right?

In some critical ways, yes. The Bush team's biggest fear is that Democrats will hold up key appointments -- especially confirmations to the judiciary. The Democratic leadership could do to the Republicans what Sen. Trent Lott did to the Clinton administration for eight years: simply refuse to bring nominations up for a vote. But there's reason to believe they won't. For all their fighting words, the Democrats confirmed Ted Olson -- a conservative attorney who has fought aggressively against women's rights and affirmative action -- as solicitor general. The Democrats had the power to filibuster Olson's confirmation (the vote was tight: 51 to 47), but the party leadership decided not to act. Conciliation was the better part of valor, they explained.

And that's how choice could fall victim to Capitol Hill brinkmanship. Focused on the Supreme Court, Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle likely will let lesser appointments slide by. But talk to abortion providers, and you find that those appointments are often where the real action is. It's at the local level that anti-Roe folks can pull the plug on women's rights -- to little fanfare but maximum effect.

Consider the case of Denise O'Donnell. For the past two and a half years, O'Donnell, as U.S. attorney for the Western District of New York, pursued the killer of Buffalo obstetrician Barnett Slepian. After a complicated international investigation, police in France finally arrested James Charles Kopp, the alleged assassin. On May 4, O'Donnell's office filed papers seeking Kopp's extradition to New York to stand trial. Since France does not extradite suspects who face capital punishment, Attorney General John Ashcroft had to assure French government officials that prosecutors would not seek to execute Kopp, who faces a state murder charge and the additional charge of violating the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act (FACE). A decision on extradition is due June 28.

In New York, federal prosecutors picked up Loretta Claire Marra and Dennis John Malvasi of Brooklyn, and charged them with aiding the fugitive Kopp. Eleanor Smeal of the Feminist Majority Foundation told Women's Enews that if O'Donnell hadn't spearheaded the case, Kopp might never have been caught. In her investigation of Slepian's murder, O'Donnell made crucial, political choices to cast a wide net in the belief that Kopp didn't act alone. In doing so, she trailed Kopp and his associates across the Atlantic and brought what Smeal calls an "international anti-choice conspiracy" to light.

But O'Donnell won't be on hand to prosecute, if and when the Kopp case finally makes it to court. On March 15, George W. Bush demanded her resignation in the middle of her four-year term. She vacated her office on May 31.

U.S. attorneys, appointed by the president, generally tender their resignations when a new administration takes office. But there have been exceptions. In O'Donnell's case, both New York Sens. Hillary Clinton and Chuck Schumer asked the White House to permit O'Donnell to complete her term. No dice. Although no new nominee has been named yet, the most likely replacement is a conservative Republican judge currently on the state family court. Kathleen M. Mehlretter, the district's former deputy attorney, is temporarily filling the post.

If the Democrats are out for "conciliation," it's unlikely that they will deem the U.S. attorney post serious enough to merit a grand fight. But for beleaguered abortion providers, the U.S. attorney is all-important. By enforcing clinic protection laws like FACE, O'Donnell made it possible for people like Marilyn Buckham, the administrator of the clinic where Slepian worked, to concentrate on providing health care, instead of having to focus on raising millions of dollars for clinic repairs, staff protection and lawsuits simply to get criminals into court. As Buckham told Women's Enews in May: "For what we went through, thank God it was under the [Clinton] administration."

National pro-choice groups usually confine their work to electing pro-choice candidates and lobbying against abortion restrictions and anti-choice Supreme Court justices. As critical as Washington is, the spotlight on federal judicial nominations obscures another crucial area in the fight for choice -- one much closer to home.

Schumer sits on the Senate Judiciary Committee. Maybe he and his colleagues will be able to block the incoming U.S. attorney candidate and demand O'Donnell's reinstatement. That will depend on whether Democratic leaders consider the post important enough -- and how much heat they get from their constituents.

Senate Approves Federal Judges

By Jesse Holland
Associated Press
Friday, July 20, 2001

After a yearlong battle, the Senate confirmed Roger Gregory on Friday as the first black federal appeals court judge in the district that represents a higher percentage of minorities than any other in the nation.

It took two presidents, three senators and several deals to permanently integrate the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, a southern circuit serving Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina, West Virginia and Maryland.

Gregory's district has 22 percent minorities, the highest percentage in the nation.

"It always speaks well when the courts are reflective of all that America has, but the most important thing is that judges serve with integrity and competence in every regard," he said after the Senate confirmed him to a lifetime appointment, 93-1.

Gregory watched the action from his home in Richmond, Va., more than a year after Sen. John Warner, R-Va., and then-Sen. Charles Robb, D-Va., said they would submit his name for the federal appeals court. "It feels good to finally have it over," Gregory said.

Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., voted against Gregory because then-President Clinton appointed him to the court on a temporary basis last December while the GOP-controlled Senate was in recess, said spokesman Ron Bonjean.

The Senate unanimously approved two U.S. District Court judges, Sam Haddon and Richard Cebull, both of Montana.

The federal judiciary has been a flash point between Republicans and Democrats, and Gregory's confirmation illustrated the machinations that have gone on in the Capitol.

Last year, Democrats accused Republicans of blocking Clinton's judicial nominees out of hope that a GOP president would win the November election. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., for example, stopped several North Carolina nominees for Gregory's seat by using a senatorial prerogative that lets senators bar nominees from their state.

Helms was retaliating for Democrats blocking his nominee, U.S. District Judge Terrance Boyle, from that seat when the first President Bush was in office. "For more than 15 months, he was never accorded the courtesy of a hearing," Helms wrote in June. "Thus, North Carolina continues the distinction of never having had a Republican judge on the Fourth Circuit since the honorable John J. Parker was nominated by President Coolidge."

To get around Helms, Clinton tapped Gregory of Virginia in June 2000 after getting support from Robb and Warner. However, the GOP-controlled Senate refused to give Gregory a hearing last year, leading Clinton to give him the temporary appointment.

Bush won the presidency and withdrew all of Clinton's still unconfirmed nominees, including Gregory. But with the Senate split 50-50 giving Democrats enough members to filibuster any nominee _ Bush renominated Gregory as one of his first 11 judicial nominees.

GOP Sen. George Allen of Virginia, who defeated Robb in that election, immediately backed Gregory.

"I asked my colleagues, and indeed the president, to not view Roger Gregory based upon the former president's political manipulations," Allen said.

Bush also renominated Boyle, and Republicans linked the nominations of Boyle and Gregory to prevent Democrats from sinking Boyle again. But then the Senate was taken over by the Democrats, who separated the two and made Gregory their first order of business.

"Mr. Gregory and many, many others have languished not only for months, but in some cases for years," said Senate Majority Leader Thomas Daschle, D-S.D. "And so in order to rectify that we put a very high priority on Mr. Gregory's confirmation."

Republicans now complain that Democrats are delaying Bush's other nominees and have threatened to hold bills hostage unless executive and judicial nominations get faster action. The GOP says their tactics have forced Democrats to move more than 70 executive and departmental nominees through in the last two weeks.

However, the judicial war isn't over. Three other Appeals Court nominees Jeff Sutton, Miguel Estrada and Michael McConnell have organized resistance against them.

The federal court system has 107 vacancies, and 25 Bush nominees have yet to receive hearings by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The battle over the 15-seat 4th Circuit isn't over either. Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C., has threatened to block Boyle's nomination unless Bush renominates one of the judges Helms blocked earlier.

Senators Confirm 3 Judges, Including Once-Stalled Black

By Alison Mitchell
The New York Times
Saturday, July 21, 2001

The Senate confirmed federal judges today for the first time since the Democrats took control in May, including Roger Gregory, who was initially named to the bench by President Bill Clinton in a recess appointment after the Republican-run Senate stalled his nomination.

Mr. Gregory, who was approved 94 to 1, is the first black judge to serve on the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, which covers Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia. Senator Trent Lott of Mississippi, the Republican leader, cast the lone vote against him.

Blacks make up 22 percent of the circuit's population, a figure higher than in any other federal jurisdiction. Mr. Clinton nominated four black judges to the Fourth Circuit but not one was granted a hearing. Mr. Gregory, a corporate lawyer in Richmond, Va., was nominated in June 2000.

Before leaving office, Mr. Clinton angered some Republicans by giving Mr. Gregory a temporary appointment to the court after the Senate adjourned for the year. Such a recess appointee is allowed to serve just one year. President Bush -- whose attorney general, John Ashcroft, came under fire in his nominations hearings for blocking a black nominee for the federal court -- renominated Mr. Gregory for a lifetime appointment in May.

"This makes a statement, I think, that is very important," Senator Tom Daschle of South Dakota, the majority leader, said today in praising both Mr. Clinton and Mr. Bush.

Virginia's two senators, John W. Warner and George F. Allen, both Republicans, called for Mr. Gregory's approval today, with Mr. Warner saying, "We are at a historic moment here with Judge Gregory."

Mr. Allen said Mr. Gregory, who had been the first person in his family to finish high school, had an "inspirational story" and a "proper judicial philosophy." He asked fellow Republicans not to view the nominee "based upon the former president's political manipulations."

Ronald D. Bonjean Jr., a spokesman for Mr. Lott, said Mr. Lott's opposition to Mr. Gregory was "an institutional decision" designed to protect Senate prerogatives and underscore his stance that "any appointment of federal judges during a recess should be opposed."

The Senate today also confirmed two other Bush nominees, Sam Haddon and Richard Cebull, as federal district judges in Montana.

The confirmation of federal judges and the ideological makeup of the courts has been a flash point between the two parties, and some of Mr. Bush's more conservative nominees are expected to have a rough time before a Democratic-led Senate.

Protesting that Democrats planned to block judges because of ideology, Republicans held up the full reorganization of the Senate under Democratic control for about a month late this spring in an effort to win a promise that all nominees for the Supreme Court would get a Senate floor vote, no matter how the Senate Judiciary Committee ruled on them.

Senate Confirms 3 Bush Judges; GOP Procedural Tactics Clear Way For Spending Bill Votes

By Audrey Hudson
The Washington Times

The Senate yesterday approved President Bush's first batch of judicial nominees, and Majority Leader Tom Daschle pledged to speed up executive nominees stalled in the Democrat-controlled body.

Roger Gregory was approved 93-1 to a permanent seat on the U.S. Appeals Court, with Minority Leader Trent Lott, Mississippi Republican, as the lone dissenter. Sam Haddon was approved 95-0 to the U.S. District Court in Montana, and Richard Cebull was approved 93-0 to the same bench.

Both Republicans and Democrats praised the confirmation of Judge Gregory, who was first nominated by President Clinton last year, but blocked by Republicans. Mr. Clinton bypassed the Senate and installed Judge Gregory to the bench during a December congressional recess.

Judge Gregory was appointed to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The panel hears cases from Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, Vermont Democrat and chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said Judge Gregory is "one of the few nominees ever nominated by presidents of different parties."

"President Bush deserves credit for renominating Judge Gregory and allowing the Senate a third chance to consider and confirm this outstanding nominee," Mr. Leahy said.

"We are at a historic moment here with Judge Gregory," said Sen. John W. Warner, Virginia Republican.

Sen. George F. Allen, Virginia Republican, asked his colleagues not to view Judge Gregory based upon the former president's "political manipulations."

In his first Senate floor speech earlier this year, Mr. Allen asked that Judge Gregory be judged "on the basis of his qualifications."

Mr. Lott opposed Judge Gregory's nomination because he opposes all recess appointments, said Ron Bonjean, Mr. Lott's spokesman.

Senate Republicans have employed procedural stalling tactics on spending bills to force Democratic leaders to speed up the confirmation process.

Republicans were successful in getting 74 nominees confirmed in seven legislative days but have lists of more than 100 names still awaiting hearings and votes.

In exchange for the judicial nominee votes and 18 executive nominees approved late Thursday,

Republicans allowed the Senate to proceed with three spending bills.

One Republican aide compared the tactic to a pace car allowing a race to begin.

Republicans stalled Senate business all day Thursday while negotiations continued over the nominees - frustrating Democrats in the process.

The strategy to link spending bills to nominees is necessary to get the process moving, Republicans said, and is endorsed by Mr. Lott.

"All I say to Democrats is: Welcome to the majority. This is what the minority does to the majority," Mr. Lott told reporters Thursday.

Despite the "tremendous amount of unfairness associated with the consideration of Clinton nominees" under Republican rule, Mr. Daschle said Democrats will be "fair" with Mr. Bush's nominees.

"The nomination process is going to be the subject, of course, of a great deal of debate," said Mr. Daschle of South Dakota.

"And I don't know what the total number will be, but over the course of the next week or so, we will have dozens more. And we'll continue to press to try to complete our work," Mr. Daschle said.

However, Mr. Daschle said senators have a right to "express themselves and use whatever parliamentary devices if they feel there is justifiable need for opposition."

Mr. Leahy said the delay in confirming judicial nominees was due to the reorganization of the Senate from Republican to Democratic control when Sen. James M. Jeffords of Vermont switched from the Republican Party to become an independent.

"I am sorry that we lost the month of June to the process of reorganizing the Senate, but I am proud of the very quick start that the committee has gotten on holding hearings and reporting nominees," Mr. Leahy said.

Senate Confirms 3 Of Bush's Judicial Nominees; Courts: Choice For 4th Circuit - - Named To The Post Temporarily By Clinton - -Is The Bench's First Black Member

By David Savage

President Bush won Senate confirmation of his first judges Friday, but the victory was celebrated more by liberal activists and Democrats than by the administration's conservative supporters.

Judge Roger Gregory, an African American lawyer from Richmond, Va., won Senate approval to a permanent judgeship on the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, a year after President Clinton nominated him to the same post.

The Senate also confirmed two trial court judges from Montana: Sam Haddon and Richard Cebull.

Despite Friday's vote, 109 vacancies remain on the federal bench, and the Senate is not expected to vote on more of Bush's court nominees until the fall.

Administration officials say they are frustrated at the slow pace of confirmations, and conservative activist Tom Jipping accused the Democrats of following "an aggressive obstructionist strategy."

"I hope the Democrats don't think they are fooling anyone with this [vote]. It shows only that they will not fight a Clinton nominee who is black," said Jipping, a lawyer for the Free Congress Foundation.

Meanwhile, the liberal Alliance for Justice said it was pleased with Gregory's confirmation to the conservative appeals court, which had been all white.

"This sends the right signal, that if you nominate judges who are not out of step with the

No, we don't yet have a nominee for the Third Circuit vacancy in New Jersey.
I don't know about the US Marshalls -- Helgi Walker is handling that.

There is no legal prohibition on the campaign cameras coming into the Oval Office to record the meeting of the President and Mark Earley. On the otherhand, there is a risk of negative press attention focusing on the use of the Oval Office for a campaign commercial. You and I discussed earlier the possibility of limiting the campaign camera to the same access that would be given the press pool. After further consideration here in counsel's office, our recommendation would be to avoid the risk associated with having the campaign camera in the Oval, that the better course would be to ask the campaign to obtain footage from the press pool that will be attending.

Over last few months, I have been in discussions with various entities re the law governing use of government equipment for political purposes. I believe the upshot is a result that could make your lives (and those of your staff) much easier than they currently are. We should discuss this at your convenience.

We received a call this morning from Katie Somers of the GAO regarding the Cabinet Center audit/implementation reports. She says that she is looking to obtain the reports as she is submitting a report to the Congress. She specifically wants to obtain the HHS report as soon as it has been issued. She says that the request from the Congress was generated by Senator Joe Lieberman and Congressman Elijah Cummings.

Can you please let me know how you would like us to repond to the GAO inquiry? Ms. Somers can be reached at 202.512.6578.

Many thanks,
Michele

By Rich Daly, CQ Staff

Updated to reflect House passage on July 19, 2001.

Synopsis

HR7 would authorize tax incentives to increase charitable contributions and allow religious groups to compete for federal money to provide social services.

Highlights

Intended to increase contributions to charities, the bill includes part of President Bush's so-called faith-based initiative to expand the number of federal programs religious groups could administer using federal grants and expand tax incentives for charitable contributions.

Delivery of services.

The House Judiciary Committee adopted a manager's amendment to emphasize that money authorized by the bill could not be used by organizations that proselytize while delivering services. If religious charities would be unable or unwilling to separate their religious activities from their social work, said Chairman F. James Sensenbrenner Jr., R-Wis., they "shouldn't apply for grant money." The amendment stemmed from Sensenbrenner's review of the bill to determine if it would violate constitutional provisions on separation of church and state.

Bush wants to expand the initiative to let religious groups run programs in several areas off limits to them under existing law, including crime and juvenile delinquency prevention, housing, child care and aid to senior citizens. The groups could continue to be able to hire based upon religious affiliation, an exemption from federal non-discrimination laws.

Another amendment adopted by the Judiciary Committee removed a section of the bill that would have protected businesses from civil liability stemming from any injuries or deaths of those touring facilities owned by the charities.

The bill would specify that direct government money could not be used for sectarian worship, instruction or proselytizing, and that if a participating religious organization offered such activity, it would have to be voluntary or offered separately from the government funded program. However, if a religious organization received government money indirectly, the organization could use such aid for religious purposes. The measure would define indirect assistance as funding through a voucher, certificate or other form of disbursement -- which Democratic opponents say could amount to $47 billion over the next 10 years.

The bill would authorize $50 million annually to provide training and technical assistance for organizations, including religious organizations, that want to participate in the programs identified in the bill.

The House rejected a Democratic amendment that would have prohibited religious-based programs receiving government money from discriminating against employees. But in response to centrist Republicans' concerns, HR7 sponsor J.C. Watts Jr., R-Okla., chairman of the House Republican Conference, said conferees would address the issue of religious charities complying with state and local civil rights laws.

Tax provisions.

The House Ways and Means Committee amended the core tax provisions of the bill to provide just a fraction of the tax cuts Bush requested. The provisions would cost an estimated $13.3 billion over 10 years, about 15 percent of the $91.7 billion Bush proposal.

The committee replaced the bill's $84.4 billion plan to allow non-itemizers to deduct 100 percent of their charitable contributions by 2006 with a $6.4 billion plan to allow a maximum deduction of $100 for individuals and $200 for married couples filing jointly by 2010.

Another amendment adopted by the Ways and Means panel would make several changes to the bill, such as:

- dropping an expansion of charitable deductions that would have included the donation of food products by non-corporate taxpayers in favor of allowing only monetary contributions to be deducted;

- replacing Individual Development Accounts, tax-free savings accounts for low-income individuals, with a doubling, to $50 million annually, of spending for a 3-year-old program (PL 105-285) that directs federal money to tribes, community groups, credit unions and other organizations that set up savings accounts for low-income people;

- modifying a Bush plan with a $2.8 billion provision that would allow older people to give their Individual Retirement Accounts to charities tax-free, setting the age for eligibility at 70.5 years old instead of Bush's proposed 59.5 years old;

- including a $917 million provision that would alter the phase-in of Bush's plan to boost from 10 percent to 15 percent the amount of charitable contributions that corporations could deduct; and

-- adding, at a cost of $3.3 billion, provisions designed to streamline the tax treatment of certain charitable contributions.

Background

Charitable choice has been the law since then-President Bill Clinton signed the welfare overhaul bill (PL 104-193) in 1996. The law allows faith-based organizations to compete for federal money to run some social services programs, including drug treatment and community service.

The program has drawn mixed reactions from the religious groups it was meant to assist, with many liberal and some conservative religious organizations coming out against it. Some religious leaders worry that their independence could be compromised by having to comply with federal guidelines before receiving money.

Critics also worry about quotas or set-asides for religious groups and fear that religious schisms could develop if churches compete for limited funds. They also argue that the proposal is a clear violation of the principle of separation of church and state. Civil liberties and other rights groups oppose the provision that allows organizations to retain the ability to discriminate in hiring based upon religion, the same right afforded churches.

Related Bills

S592 mirrors the original version of HR7, except for language that would expand the charitable choice provisions in existing laws. The Senate bill would limit the federal assistance to religious programs that provide the types of services outlined by the 1996 welfare overhaul measure.

It is the charitable choice provisions of HR7 that have drawn all of the scrutiny. Because of the controversy, the Senate bill's sponsors have left charitable choice out of their bill and have agreed to wait a few months until the idea's pros and cons have been tested more thoroughly in congressional hearings, as well as at the White House Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives.

Outlook

HR7 has become embroiled in the question of whether charities receiving federal funds should be able to consider sexual orientation when hiring. The House rejected a Democratic amendment that would have made religious groups receiving money under the bill subject to all state and local civil rights laws, but similar language likely would feature prominently in any Senate version.

Supporters say they are confident the tax measures will pass because even the most vocal opponents of the House measure support those provisions, even though the fate of the rest of the bill is less certain. But Senate leaders have said the charitable tax breaks face long odds in their chamber. Senate Finance Chairman Max Baucus, D-Mont., has not considered them a priority and said that any future tax cuts must have a revenue offset, a tough political hurdle to clear.

Given the changes to both the tax and social policy provisions by House committees, the administration and the bill's chief supporters -- Watts and Tony P. Hall, D-Ohio -- expressed hope that House passage would generate interest in the Senate. But Democrats rejected expected Senate consideration as wildly optimistic. "This is obviously just a press release bill. It's going over to the Senate and into the ash can," said Jim McDermott, D-Wash.

It remains unclear if the Democratic-controlled Senate will take up the measure. But if it does, most observers expect senators to water it down further.

Good morning! Larry Lindsey is working on a partnership project with HUD and some outside groups on community development. Because of the complexity of the effort, certain legal issues are undoubtedly going to arise. To that end, I'd like to stop by and chat with you at your earliest convenience to make sure we all understand the proper lay of the land.

Could you drop me a line with a convenient time for you?

Many thanks!

Janet

Guys

When will we know the new judges for sure?

I would like to arrange a) a judicial coalition meeting on Tuesday and b) a judicial teleconference of legal elites (Sekulow, Meese, state legal societies, Federalist society, etc) Tuesday afternoon to focus not just on new judges but also a macro-wrap up on where we stand.

Warmly

I will be there. I think we should try hard not to postpone -- it's been a couple weeks since we have gotten together on this.

We are planning to hold the next meeting of the Confirmation Working Group this afternoon at 4 pm at DOJ, Room 4637 (Associate AG's conference room). Please note that due to another urgent matter it may be necessary for us to postpone the meeting until later this week. If so we will send a further email at the earliest possible opportunity today.

Thanks

All -

We are planning to hold the next meeting of the Confirmation Working Group this afternoon at 4 pm at DOJ, Room 4637 (Associate AG's conference room). Please note that due to another urgent matter it may be necessary for us to postpone the meeting until later this week. If so we will send a further email at the earliest possible opportunity today.

Thanks
 Jennifer Newstead

That's me. DOD is playing a leading role in screening nominees initially. Paul Koffsky is our contact over there.

A staff member needs pro bono assistance on a will and on a related power of attorney/visitation issue. The staff member lives in the District. This is somewhat urgent.

Any takers among you or can you refer me to any of your friends in your former firms who would be willing to aid?

Thanks.

The Coalition has a website up about the Judicial Nominations. While not fully up and running yet, it is a good start.

They plan to make more progress during the August recess.

Take a look.

<http://www.fairjudiciary.com/>

We'll see everyone at 4:00 p.m. today.

The appropriate contact is Sheldon Bradshaw in OLC (514-3694). My understanding is that this is not on the usual legislative comment track because OLC is attempting to resolve a dispute between two agencies on this matter.

The appropriate contact is Sheldon Bradshaw in OLC (514-3694). My understanding is that this is not on the usual legislative comment track because OLC is attempting to resolve a dispute between two agencies on this matter.

Is that a typo? I don't think you could fabricate a firm name that more aptly describes him if you tried.

Heather,

Would it be moving mountains to change the meeting time to either 2:00 or 4:30 tomorrow? The reason is that I want to schedule a press backgrounder with me and Brett here at DoJ at 3:00, right after Ari's press conference, and Jennifer has a conflicting meeting on Hill. If that would put out our friends terribly, then perhaps we can have the press backgrounder at 4:00, but then we are pressing close to filing deadline time. One other alternative is to do the press backgrounder on Friday morning, but that would not link it to the slew of nominations stories for tomorrow. Collective thoughts, everyone? Thanks,

Viet

Subject: RE: Meeting in 242 Dirksen tomorrow at 3:00 w/Sen. Republican Leadership staff on Judicial Noms

Heather,

Would it be moving mountains to change the meeting time to either 2:00 or 4:30 tomorrow? The reason is that I want to schedule a press backgrounder with me and Brett here at DoJ at 3:00, right after Ari's press conference, and Jennifer has a conflicting meeting on Hill. If that would put out our friends terribly, then perhaps we can have the press backgrounder at 4:00, but then we are pressing close to filing deadline time. One other alternative is to do the press backgrounder on Friday morning, but that would not link it to the slew of nominations stories for tomorrow. Collective thoughts, everyone? Thanks,

Viet

Viet, this is just to follow-up on our conversation yesterday re: meeting with a small group of Republican Senate staff on Judicial Nominations. I spoke with John Mashburn and Makan this morning (and your scheduler). And 3:00 tomorrow (Thurs.) works for everyone. Makan would like to host it in his office. 242 Dirksen.

Makan, as you know, would like to keep this meeting separate from the Tues. morning meetings that hopefully we will get underway next week. He would prefer that we not raise the Tues morning meetings at the meeting tomorrow, as he'd like to keep those small, as you know. For tomorrow, Brett, can you make it? Also, Makan mentioned that it might be helpful to have Jennifer Newstead and Kyle Sampson at the meeting as well. Viet would you like to include Jennifer?

Also, can we bring a list of all the judicial noms that we've sent up to the Hill? I think we should use this meeting to simply cover where we are right now with sending Judicial noms up, and where we hope to be following the Aug recess. Viet, do you think we're ready to talk to them about a couple of the key communications points that we discussed yesterday?

Thanks, Heather

Brett,

I just noticed that I did not provide you with a copy of the previous administration's NSC memo on political activity. If you think it would be of any use in your review I can provide you a copy of the old memo, which I copied almost verbatim. I made minor changes to such things as references to political parties (republican/democrat), an example of a non-partisan group, and deleted references to political campaigns by the First Lady. Substance remained unchanged except for the one passage highlighted w/ a note/comment to you.

Please let me know if you'd like to see the earlier memo.

Thanks. Jock

DOJ has faxed me a copy of two subpoenas they received in the above-captioned case addressed to the White House and EOP. DOJ wants to know if anyone at the White House Office or EOP accepted service of these subpoenas. Anyone do so?

A federal magistrate from Southwest Texas and a Dallas state district judge have been recommended to President Bush to fill federal judicial vacancies in Texas.

Recommended for the western district was U.S. Magistrate Alia Moses Ludlum of Del Rio. In the northern district, 160th State District Court Judge David C. Godbey of Dallas was recommended.

The nominations, announced by Republican Sens. Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison, were sent to the White House Wednesday.

Ludlum and Godbey join a pool of candidates recommended by the senators from which Bush will nominate federal judges. The Senate then must approve the nominations.

Ludlum, 39, has been the U.S. Magistrate in Del Rio for about a year and worked in the position part-time between 1997 and 2000.

She served as an assistant U.S. attorney in Del Rio from 1990 until 1997, and as a prosecutor in the Travis County Attorney's office. She earned her bachelor's degree from Texas Woman's University in 1983 and her law degree from University of Texas School of Law in 1986.

Godbey, 43, has served as the 106th district's judge since 1995. He earned his bachelor's degree in electrical engineering and mathematics from Southern Methodist University in 1978 and his law degree from Harvard Law School in 1982.

He also has been a partner in the Dallas law firm Hughes & Luce.

President Bush To Nominate Six Individuals To Serve As U.S. Attorneys And Two Individuals To Serve In Federal Judiciary

U.S. Newswire

Wednesday, August 1, 2001

President George W. Bush today announced his intention to nominate six individuals to serve as

United States Attorneys and his intention to nominate two individuals to serve as members of the federal judiciary.

The President intends to nominate Timothy M. Burgess to be United States Attorney for the District of Alaska. He has served as an Assistant United States Attorney in the District of Alaska since 1989, and was an Associate with Gilmore and Franklin in Anchorage, from 1987 to 1989. Burgess received his undergraduate degree and M. B. A. from the University of Alaska and his J. D. from Northeastern University.

The President intends to nominate Harry S. Mattice, Jr. to be United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Tennessee. He is presently Of Counsel to Baker, Donelson, Bearman and Caldwell in Chattanooga. In 1997, he served as Senior Counsel to the United States Senate Committee on Government Affairs. From 1981 to 1997, and then again from 1998 to 2000, Mattice was with Miller and Martin in Chattanooga, first as an Associate and then as a Partner. He received both his undergraduate and law degrees from the University of Tennessee.

The President intends to nominate Robert G. McCampbell to be United States Attorney for the Western District of Oklahoma. He is currently a Partner with Crowe and Dunlevy in Oklahoma City, and from 1987 to 1994, he was an Assistant U.S. Attorney for the Western District of Oklahoma. Before joining the U.S. Attorneys office, he was an Associate with Crowe and Dunlevy. He is a graduate of Vanderbilt University and Yale Law School.

The President intends to nominate Paul J. McNulty to be United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia. He presently serves as Principal Associate Deputy Attorney General at the U.S. Department of Justice and from 1999 to 2001, he was Chief Counsel and Director of Legislative Operations in the Office of Majority Leader of the House of Representatives. From 1995 to 1999, he served with the House of Representatives Judiciary Committee, first as Chief Counsel to the Subcommittee on Crime and then as Director of Communications and Chief Counsel to the Committee. McNulty was Counsel to Shaw, Pittman, Potts and Trowbridge from 1993 to 1995, and he served with the Department of Justice from 1990 to 1993 as Deputy Director of the Office of Policy Development and then as Director and Chief Spokesman for the Office of Policy and Communications. He was Minority Counsel to the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime from 1987 to 1990, and from 1985 to 1987 he was Director of Legal Services at the Legal Services Corporation. From 1983 to 1985, he served as Counsel to the U.S.

House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct. He is a graduate of Grove City College and Capital University School of Law.

The President intends to nominate Michael W. Mosman to be United States Attorney for the District of Oregon. He has served as Assistant U.S. Attorney for the District of Oregon since 1988. From 1986 to 1988, Mosman was an Associate with Miller, Nash in Portland. He is a graduate of Utah State University and Brigham Young University Law School.

The President intends to nominate Strom Thurmond, Jr. to be United States Attorney for the District of South Carolina. He has served as Assistant Solicitor for the Second Judicial Circuit for South Carolina since 1999. From 1998 to 1999, he was a Partner with Strom, Young and Thurmond. He received both his undergraduate and Law degrees from the University of South Carolina.

The President intends to nominate Marian B. Horn to be a Judge of the United States Court of Federal Claims.

The President intends to nominate Charles F. Lettow to be a Judge of the United States Court of Federal Claims.

Mischief Makers Lazy Senate Holds Up Bush Nominees

The Daily Oklahoman

Wednesday, August 1, 2001

Being president is hard enough as it is, but the Senate continues to complicate matters for George W. Bush with its lazy approach toward confirming his nominees for federal positions.

We say "lazy" because we hesitate to assign more sinister motives to the Democratic-controlled chamber. The bottom line is the Bush administration is being hamstrung because of a lack of action on nominations to the judiciary and dozens of executive branch posts.

Majority Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota should quit talking about bipartisan cooperation and demonstrate it by getting the Senate to move on Bush's nominees.

The White House reports that as of June 30, Bush had nominated 315 people to positions requiring Senate confirmation, but that only 132 or 41.9 percent had been acted upon.

That compares to 249 nominated by Bill Clinton (188 or 75.5 percent of them confirmed), 222 by the first President Bush (147 or 66.2 percent confirmed) and 301 by Ronald Reagan (225 or 74.7 confirmed) at the same time period during their first terms.

Those in limbo include United Nations Ambassador-designate John Negroponte. For all the Democrats' bluster about the importance of the U.N., you'd think Negroponte's May nomination would've been voted on by now.

Instead, some Democrats on the Foreign Relations Committee are holding things up while they dig into Negroponte's work as ambassador to Honduras in the 1980s, questions that were asked and answered when he was nominated to be ambassador to Mexico in 1989.

On the judicial front, things also are slow moving.

Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy of Vermont was full of alarm in 1998 when there were 83 vacancies. Today there are more than 100 openings, yet only three of Bush's 29 judicial nominations have been confirmed by the Senate - and one of those was a judge previously nominated by Clinton.

Finally, there's the sad case - a bushwhacking, really - of Mary Sheila Gall, nominated to be chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission. Gall has been on the three-member commission since 1991, including her renomination by Clinton in 1999. Yet Commerce Committee Democrats, prompted by Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton of New York, say she is unqualified to lead the panel.

Clinton opposes the nomination because Gall has tried to work with manufacturers to fix defective products rather than impose fines and penalties. Clinton's colleagues listen because the former first lady is a hefty fund-raiser, accumulating $ 660,000 in her first six months as senator.

Thus, during a hearing last week Democrats poured on the rhetoric, accusing Gall of siding with manufacturers against children.

It's shameless politics and a microcosm of a Senate, now under Democratic control, that is making mischief with Bush's nominees and hurting the country in the process.

"Thomasing" Bush's Judges; Democrats Move Beyond Borking

By Byron York
The National Review
Friday, July 27, 2001

There's a new word going around among Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee: "Thomasing."

Named after the confirmation ordeal of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, it's not as catchy as the more widely used "Borking," but it better describes a new battle that's going on over how the committee deals with potentially embarrassing information in the backgrounds of Bush White House judicial nominees.

In the past, when candidates for the federal bench filled out extensive personal history reports for the committee and the FBI, they were asked, among other things, about drug use and any arrests or convictions in their past. Their answers were confidential; the information was on forms that only senators, as well as a small number staff members from each party — each with a top-secret clearance — were allowed to see. Keeping that information secret allowed the committee to determine whether it was relevant to the nomination in a way that did not embarrass the nominee.

Now, committee chairman Patrick Leahy and fellow Democrats want to change the rules. Under their proposal, drug use and arrest/conviction information — along with information about any political contributions or political volunteer work the nominee might have done — will be contained in forms that would be available to a far greater number of committee staff members.

It's a situation guaranteed to produce leaks — which, should they occur, might well damage some of the president's nominees. "This is Thomasing, not Borking," says one Republican aide, referring to the difference between the mostly ideological arguments used in 1987 to sink the Supreme Court nomination of Robert Bork and the barrage of allegations — pornography consumption, sexual harassment — used against Thomas. "Every single nominee has allegations in their record that the committee investigates on a bipartisan basis. To throw that out in the open would become a real problem."

Privately, some in the GOP suggest that Bill Clinton's judicial nominees might have had a few embarrassing issues in their past, things that Judiciary Committee chairman Orrin Hatch and his fellow Republicans kept private. But it's too late to kvetch about that now; Republicans didn't think to change the confirmation ground rules when they had the chance.

For his part, Leahy maintains that he is simply trying to update the 10-year-old questionnaire and make it simpler. "He isn't asking for anything outrageous," says a Democratic aide. "The confidential material will stay confidential."

Both sides have been engaged in intensive negotiations for the past several days, but so far there has been no progress on the hot-button issues. Will Leahy ultimately win? The short answer is yes. Although there has been a history of compromises between the majority and minority on the committee, in the end, says one staffer, "Leahy can do whatever he wants as chairman."

Meanwhile, the number of vacancies on the federal courts remains unchanged. On Tuesday, the committee held a confirmation hearing for another Bush nominee, William Riley, nominated to the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals. If, as expected, Riley is approved by the full committee before the August recess, he will be the fourth Bush judge — two circuit court, two district court — to pass muster so far. Which means that when September arrives, it is likely that 107 vacancies will remain on the federal bench.

Republicans compare that record to Leahy's statements in July of last year, when he said he was concerned about what was widely known as a "vacancy crisis" on the federal courts. "We should be considering 20 to 30 more judges this year, including at least another half dozen for the Court of Appeals," Leahy said in mid-July 2000. "We cannot afford to...stop acting on these nominees now in anticipation of the presidential election in November. We must use all the time until adjournment to remedy the vacancies that have been perpetuated on the courts to the detriment of the American people and the administration of justice." At the time Leahy spoke, there were 63 vacancies on the federal bench.

A federal magistrate from Southwest Texas and a Dallas state district judge have been recommended to President Bush to fill federal judicial vacancies in Texas.

Recommended for the western district was U.S. Magistrate Alia Moses Ludlum of Del Rio. In the northern district, 160th State District Court Judge David C. Godbey of Dallas was recommended.

The nominations, announced by Republican Sens. Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison, were sent to the White House Wednesday.

Ludlum and Godbey join a pool of candidates recommended by the senators from which Bush will nominate federal judges. The Senate then must approve the nominations.

Ludlum, 39, has been the U.S. Magistrate in Del Rio for about a year and worked in the position part-time between 1997 and 2000.

She served as an assistant U.S. attorney in Del Rio from 1990 until 1997, and as a prosecutor in the Travis County Attorney's office. She earned her bachelor's degree from Texas Woman's University in 1983 and her law degree from University of Texas School of Law in 1986.

Godbey, 43, has served as the 106th district's judge since 1995. He earned his bachelor's degree in electrical engineering and mathematics from Southern Methodist University in 1978 and his law degree from Harvard Law School in 1982.

He also has been a partner in the Dallas law firm Hughes & Luce.

United States Attorneys and his intention to nominate two individuals to serve as members of the federal judiciary.

The President intends to nominate Timothy M. Burgess to be United States Attorney for the District of Alaska. He has served as an Assistant United States Attorney in the District of Alaska since 1989, and was an Associate with Gilmore and Franklin in Anchorage, from 1987 to 1989. Burgess received his undergraduate degree and M. B. A. from the University of Alaska and his J. D. from Northeastern University.

The President intends to nominate Harry S. Mattice, Jr. to be United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Tennessee. He is presently Of Counsel to Baker, Donelson, Bearman and Caldwell in Chattanooga. In 1997, he served as Senior Counsel to the United States Senate Committee on Government Affairs. From 1981 to 1997, and then again from 1998 to 2000, Mattice was with Miller and Martin in Chattanooga, first as an Associate and then as a Partner. He received both his undergraduate and law degrees from the University of Tennessee.

The President intends to nominate Robert G. McCampbell to be United States Attorney for the Western District of Oklahoma. He is currently a Partner with Crowe and Dunlevy in Oklahoma City, and from 1987 to 1994, he was an Assistant U.S. Attorney for the Western District of Oklahoma. Before joining the U.S. Attorneys office, he was an Associate with Crowe and Dunlevy. He is a graduate of Vanderbilt University and Yale Law School.

The President intends to nominate Paul J. McNulty to be United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia. He presently serves as Principal Associate Deputy Attorney General at the U.S. Department of Justice and from 1999 to 2001, he was Chief Counsel and Director of Legislative Operations in the Office of Majority Leader of the House of Representatives. From 1995 to 1999, he served with the House of Representatives Judiciary Committee, first as Chief Counsel to the Subcommittee on Crime and then as Director of Communications and Chief Counsel to the Committee. McNulty was Counsel to Shaw, Pittman, Potts and Trowbridge from 1993 to 1995, and he served with the Department of Justice from 1990 to 1993 as Deputy Director of the Office of Policy Development and then as Director and Chief Spokesman for the Office of Policy and Communications. He was Minority Counsel to the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime from 1987 to 1990, and from 1985 to 1987 he was Director of Legal Services at the Legal Services Corporation. From 1983 to 1985, he served as Counsel to the U.S.

Mischief Makers Lazy Senate Holds Up Bush Nominees

The Daily Oklahoman

Wednesday, August 1, 2001

Being president is hard enough as it is, but the Senate continues to complicate matters for George W. Bush with its lazy approach toward confirming his nominees for federal positions.

We say "lazy" because we hesitate to assign more sinister motives to the Democratic-controlled chamber. The bottom line is the Bush administration is being hamstrung because of a lack of action on nominations to the judiciary and dozens of executive branch posts.

A federal magistrate from Southwest Texas and a Dallas state district judge have been recommended to President Bush to fill federal judicial vacancies in Texas.

Recommended for the western district was U.S. Magistrate Alia Moses Ludlum of Del Rio. In the northern district, 160th State District Court Judge David C. Godbey of Dallas was recommended.

The nominations, announced by Republican Sens. Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison, were sent to the White House Wednesday.

Ludlum and Godbey join a pool of candidates recommended by the senators from which Bush will nominate federal judges. The Senate then must approve the nominations.

Ludlum, 39, has been the U.S. Magistrate in Del Rio for about a year and worked in the position part-time between 1997 and 2000.

She served as an assistant U.S. attorney in Del Rio from 1990 until 1997, and as a prosecutor in the Travis County Attorney's office. She earned her bachelor's degree from Texas Woman's University in 1983 and her law degree from University of Texas School of Law in 1986.

Godbey, 43, has served as the 106th district's judge since 1995. He earned his bachelor's degree in electrical engineering and mathematics from Southern Methodist University in 1978 and his law degree from Harvard Law School in 1982.

He also has been a partner in the Dallas law firm Hughes & Luce.

The President intends to nominate Timothy M. Burgess to be United States Attorney for the District of Alaska. He has served as an Assistant United States Attorney in the District of Alaska since 1989, and was an Associate with Gilmore and Franklin in Anchorage, from 1987 to 1989. Burgess received his undergraduate degree and M. B. A. from the University of Alaska and his J. D. from Northeastern University.

The President intends to nominate Harry S. Mattice, Jr. to be United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Tennessee. He is presently Of Counsel to Baker, Donelson, Bearman and Caldwell in Chattanooga. In 1997, he served as Senior Counsel to the United States Senate Committee on Government Affairs. From 1981 to 1997, and then again from 1998 to 2000, Mattice was with Miller and Martin in Chattanooga, first as an Associate and then as a Partner. He received both his undergraduate and law degrees from the University of Tennessee.

The President intends to nominate Robert G. McCampbell to be United States Attorney for the Western District of Oklahoma. He is currently a Partner with Crowe and Dunlevy in Oklahoma City, and from 1987 to 1994, he was an Assistant U.S. Attorney for the Western District of Oklahoma. Before joining the U.S. Attorneys office, he was an Associate with Crowe and Dunlevy. He is a graduate of Vanderbilt University and Yale Law School.

The President intends to nominate Paul J. McNulty to be United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia. He presently serves as Principal Associate Deputy Attorney General at the U.S. Department of Justice and from 1999 to 2001, he was Chief Counsel and Director of Legislative Operations in the Office of Majority Leader of the House of Representatives. From 1995 to 1999, he served with the House of Representatives Judiciary Committee, first as Chief Counsel to the Subcommittee on Crime and then as Director of Communications and Chief Counsel to the Committee. McNulty was Counsel to Shaw, Pittman, Potts and Trowbridge from 1993 to 1995, and he served with the Department of Justice from 1990 to 1993 as Deputy Director of the Office of Policy Development and then as Director and Chief Spokesman for the Office of Policy and Communications. He was Minority Counsel to the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime from 1987 to 1990, and from 1985 to 1987 he was Director of Legal Services at the Legal Services Corporation. From 1983 to 1985, he served as Counsel to the U.S.

Mischief Makers Lazy Senate Holds Up Bush Nominees

The Daily Oklahoman

Wednesday, August 1, 2001

Being president is hard enough as it is, but the Senate continues to complicate matters for George W. Bush with its lazy approach toward confirming his nominees for federal positions.

We say "lazy" because we hesitate to assign more sinister motives to the Democratic-controlled chamber. The bottom line is the Bush administration is being hamstrung because of a lack of action on nominations to the judiciary and dozens of executive branch posts.

York Times

June 26, 2001 Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis New York Times

June 26, 2001

Majority Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota should quit talking about bipartisan cooperation and demonstrate it by getting the Senate to move on Bush's nominees.

The White House reports that as of June 30, Bush had nominated 315 people to positions requiring Senate confirmation, but that only 132 or 41.9 percent had been acted upon.

That compares to 249 nominated by Bill Clinton (188 or 75.5 percent of them confirmed), 222 by the first President Bush (147 or 66.2 percent confirmed) and 301 by Ronald Reagan (225 or 74.7 confirmed) at the same time period during their first terms.

Those in limbo include United Nations Ambassador-designate John Negroponte. For all the Democrats' bluster about the importance of the U.N., you'd think Negroponte's May nomination would've been voted on by now.

Instead, some Democrats on the Foreign Relations Committee are holding things up while they dig into Negroponte's work as ambassador to Honduras in the 1980s, questions that were asked and answered when he was nominated to be ambassador to Mexico in 1989.

On the judicial front, things also are slow moving.

Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy of Vermont was full of alarm in 1998 when there were 83 vacancies. Today there are more than 100 openings, yet only three of Bush's 29 judicial nominations have been confirmed by the Senate - and one of those was a judge previously nominated by Clinton.

Finally, there's the sad case - a bushwhacking, really - of Mary Sheila Gall, nominated to be chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission. Gall has been on the three-member commission since 1991, including her renomination by Clinton in 1999. Yet Commerce Committee Democrats, prompted by Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton of New York, say she is unqualified to lead the panel.

Clinton opposes the nomination because Gall has tried to work with manufacturers to fix defective products rather than impose fines and penalties. Clinton's colleagues listen because the former first lady is a hefty fund-raiser, accumulating $ 660,000 in her first six months as senator.

Thus, during a hearing last week Democrats poured on the rhetoric, accusing Gall of siding with manufacturers against children.

It's shameless politics and a microcosm of a Senate, now under Democratic control, that is making mischief with Bush's nominees and hurting the country in the process.

"Thomasing" Bush's Judges; Democrats Move Beyond Borking

By Byron York
The National Review
Friday, July 27, 2001

There's a new word going around among Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee: "Thomasing."

Named after the confirmation ordeal of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, it's not as catchy as the more widely used "Borking," but it better describes a new battle that's going on over how the committee deals with potentially embarrassing information in the backgrounds of Bush White House judicial nominees.

In the past, when candidates for the federal bench filled out extensive personal history reports for the committee and the FBI, they were asked, among other things, about drug use and any arrests or convictions in their past. Their answers were confidential; the information was on forms that only senators, as well as a small number staff members from each party — each with a top-secret clearance — were allowed to see. Keeping that information secret allowed the committee to determine whether it was relevant to the nomination in a way that did not embarrass the nominee.

York Times

June 26, 2001 Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate
Neil Lewis New York Times
June 26, 2001

Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate
Neil Lewis

Now, committee chairman Patrick Leahy and fellow Democrats want to change the rules. Under their proposal, drug use and arrest/conviction information — along with information about any political contributions or political volunteer work the nominee might have done — will be contained in forms that would be available to a far greater number of committee staff members.

It's a situation guaranteed to produce leaks — which, should they occur, might well damage some of the president's nominees. "This is Thomasing, not Borking," says one Republican aide, referring to the difference between the mostly ideological arguments used in 1987 to sink the Supreme Court nomination of Robert Bork and the barrage of allegations — pornography consumption, sexual harassment — used against Thomas. "Every single nominee has allegations in their record that the committee investigates on a bipartisan basis. To throw that out in the open would become a real problem."

Privately, some in the GOP suggest that Bill Clinton's judicial nominees might have had a few embarrassing issues in their past, things that Judiciary Committee chairman Orrin Hatch and his fellow Republicans kept private. But it's too late to kvetch about that now; Republicans didn't think to change the confirmation ground rules when they had the chance.

For his part, Leahy maintains that he is simply trying to update the 10-year-old questionnaire and make it simpler. "He isn't asking for anything outrageous," says a Democratic aide. "The confidential material will stay confidential."

Both sides have been engaged in intensive negotiations for the past several days, but so far there has been no progress on the hot-button issues. Will Leahy ultimately win? The short answer is yes. Although there has been a history of compromises between the majority and minority on the committee, in the end, says one staffer, "Leahy can do whatever he wants as chairman."

Meanwhile, the number of vacancies on the federal courts remains unchanged. On Tuesday, the committee held a confirmation hearing for another Bush nominee, William Riley, nominated to the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals. If, as expected, Riley is approved by the full committee before the August recess, he will be the fourth Bush judge — two circuit court, two district court — to pass muster so far. Which means that when September arrives, it is likely that 107 vacancies will remain on the federal bench.

York Times

June 26, 2001 Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis New York Times

June 26, 2001

Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis

Republicans compare that record to Leahy's statements in July of last year, when he said he was concerned about what was widely known as a "vacancy crisis" on the federal courts. "We should be considering 20 to 30 more judges this year, including at least another half dozen for the Court of Appeals," Leahy said in mid-July 2000. "We cannot afford to...stop acting on these nominees now in anticipation of the presidential election in November. We must use all the time until adjournment to remedy the vacancies that have been perpetuated on the courts to the detriment of the American people and the administration of justice." At the time Leahy spoke, there were 63 vacancies on the federal bench.

Mischief Makers Lazy Senate Holds Up Bush Nominees

The Daily Oklahoman

Wednesday, August 1, 2001

Being president is hard enough as it is, but the Senate continues to complicate matters for George W. Bush with its lazy approach toward confirming his nominees for federal positions.

We say "lazy" because we hesitate to assign more sinister motives to the Democratic-controlled chamber. The bottom line is the Bush administration is being hamstrung because of a lack of action on nominations to the judiciary and dozens of executive branch posts.

Majority Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota should quit talking about bipartisan cooperation and demonstrate it by getting the Senate to move on Bush's nominees.

The White House reports that as of June 30, Bush had nominated 315 people to positions requiring Senate confirmation, but that only 132 or 41.9 percent had been acted upon.

That compares to 249 nominated by Bill Clinton (188 or 75.5 percent of them confirmed), 222 by the first President Bush (147 or 66.2 percent confirmed) and 301 by Ronald Reagan (225 or 74.7 confirmed) at the same time period during their first terms.

Those in limbo include United Nations Ambassador-designate John Negroponte. For all the Democrats' bluster about the importance of the U.N., you'd think Negroponte's May nomination would've been voted on by now.

Instead, some Democrats on the Foreign Relations Committee are holding things up while they dig into Negroponte's work as ambassador to Honduras in the 1980s, questions that were asked and answered when he was nominated to be ambassador to Mexico in 1989.

On the judicial front, things also are slow moving.

Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy of Vermont was full of alarm in 1998 when there were 83 vacancies. Today there are more than 100 openings, yet only three of Bush's 29 judicial nominations have been confirmed by the Senate - and one of those was a judge previously nominated by Clinton.

Finally, there's the sad case - a bushwhacking, really - of Mary Sheila Gall, nominated to be chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission. Gall has been on the three-member commission since 1991, including her renomination by Clinton in 1999. Yet Commerce Committee Democrats, prompted by Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton of New York, say she is unqualified to lead the panel.

Clinton opposes the nomination because Gall has tried to work with manufacturers to fix defective products rather than impose fines and penalties. Clinton's colleagues listen because the former first lady is a hefty fund-raiser, accumulating $ 660,000 in her first six months as senator.

Thus, during a hearing last week Democrats poured on the rhetoric, accusing Gall of siding with manufacturers against children.

It's shameless politics and a microcosm of a Senate, now under Democratic control, that is making mischief with Bush's nominees and hurting the country in the process.

"Thomasing" Bush's Judges; Democrats Move Beyond Borking

By Byron York
The National Review
Friday, July 27, 2001

There's a new word going around among Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee: "Thomasing."

Named after the confirmation ordeal of Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, it's not as catchy as the more widely used "Borking," but it better describes a new battle that's going on over how the committee deals with potentially embarrassing information in the backgrounds of Bush White House judicial nominees.

In the past, when candidates for the federal bench filled out extensive personal history reports for the committee and the FBI, they were asked, among other things, about drug use and any arrests or convictions in their past. Their answers were confidential; the information was on forms that only senators, as well as a small number staff members from each party — each with a top-secret clearance — were allowed to see. Keeping that information secret allowed the committee to determine whether it was relevant to the nomination in a way that did not embarrass the nominee.

York Times

June 26, 2001 Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate
Neil Lewis New York Times
June 26, 2001

Now, committee chairman Patrick Leahy and fellow Democrats want to change the rules. Under their proposal, drug use and arrest/conviction information — along with information about any political contributions or political volunteer work the nominee might have done — will be contained in forms that would be available to a far greater number of committee staff members.

It's a situation guaranteed to produce leaks — which, should they occur, might well damage some of the president's nominees. "This is Thomasing, not Borking," says one Republican aide, referring to the difference between the mostly ideological arguments used in 1987 to sink the Supreme Court nomination of Robert Bork and the barrage of allegations — pornography consumption, sexual harassment — used against Thomas. "Every single nominee has allegations in their record that the committee investigates on a bipartisan basis. To throw that out in the open would become a real problem."

Privately, some in the GOP suggest that Bill Clinton's judicial nominees might have had a few embarrassing issues in their past, things that Judiciary Committee chairman Orrin Hatch and his fellow Republicans kept private. But it's too late to kvetch about that now; Republicans didn't think to change the confirmation ground rules when they had the chance.

For his part, Leahy maintains that he is simply trying to update the 10-year-old questionnaire and make it simpler. "He isn't asking for anything outrageous," says a Democratic aide. "The confidential material will stay confidential."

Both sides have been engaged in intensive negotiations for the past several days, but so far there has been no progress on the hot-button issues. Will Leahy ultimately win? The short answer is yes. Although there has been a history of compromises between the majority and minority on the committee, in the end, says one staffer, "Leahy can do whatever he wants as chairman."

Meanwhile, the number of vacancies on the federal courts remains unchanged. On Tuesday, the committee held a confirmation hearing for another Bush nominee, William Riley, nominated to the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals. If, as expected, Riley is approved by the full committee before the August recess, he will be the fourth Bush judge — two circuit court, two district court — to pass muster so far. Which means that when September arrives, it is likely that 107 vacancies will remain on the federal bench.

York Times

June 26, 2001 Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis New York Times

June 26, 2001

Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis

Republicans compare that record to Leahy's statements in July of last year, when he said he was concerned about what was widely known as a "vacancy crisis" on the federal courts. "We should be considering 20 to 30 more judges this year, including at least another half dozen for the Court of Appeals," Leahy said in mid-July 2000. "We cannot afford to...stop acting on these nominees now in anticipation of the presidential election in November. We must use all the time until adjournment to remedy the vacancies that have been perpetuated on the courts to the detriment of the American people and the administration of justice." At the time Leahy spoke, there were 63 vacancies on the federal bench.

Heather,

Would it be moving mountains to change the meeting time to either 2:00 or 4:30 tomorrow? The reason is that I want to schedule a press backgrounder with me and Brett here at DoJ at 3:00, right after Ari's press conference, and Jennifer has a conflicting meeting on Hill. If that would put out our friends terribly, then perhaps we can have the press backgrounder at 4:00, but then we are pressing close to filing deadline time. One other alternative is to do the press backgrounder on Friday morning, but that would not link it to the slew of nominations stories for tomorrow.
Collective thoughts, everyone? Thanks,

Viet

Viet, this is just to follow-up on our conversation yesterday re: meeting with a small group of Republican Senate staff on Judicial Nominations. I spoke with John Mashburn and Makan this morning (and your scheduler). And 3:00 tomorrow
(Thurs.) works for everyone. Makan would like to host it in his office. 242

Makan, as you know, would like to keep this meeting separate from the Tues.

morning meetings that hopefully we will get underway next week. He would prefer that we not raise the Tues morning meetings at the meeting tomorrow, as he'd like to keep those small, as you know. For tomorrow, Brett, can you make it? Also, Makan mentioned that it might be helpful to have Jennifer Newstead and Kyle Sampson at the meeting as well. Viet would you like to include Jennifer?

Also, can we bring a list of all the judicial noms that we've sent up to the Hill? I think we should use this meeting to simply cover where we are right now with sending Judicial noms up, and where we hope to be following the Aug recess. Viet, do you think we're ready to talk to them about a couple of the key communications points that we discussed yesterday?

Thanks, Heather

1. I am double-checking on the calculation-of-roundtrip-airfare question with the Office of Special Counsel, which is the independent federal agency that administers these political travel regulations.
2. If people simply attend and watch, but do not engage in political activity (e.g., do not sit on the platform), that would not affect their official-traveler status.
3. The government (federal or local) picks up all security-related costs.

for confirmation hearings is uncertain.

The other nominees were two Lexington lawyers: Karen Caldwell, 45, a former U.S. attorney who helped oversee the federal investigation of public corruption known as Operation BOPTR0T; and Danny Reeves, 44, who has represented Ashland Oil and the Kentucky High School Athletic Association.

Appointments to federal judgeships are for life and are viewed as prize political plums. Traditionally, presidents closely follow the recommendations of the U.S. senators from their party in making appointments for a particular state.

The elder Bunning and fellow Republican Sen. Mitch McConnell announced the nominations in a statement that did not take note of the relationship between the Bunnings. It described the three as "talented and experienced Kentuckians. . . . We strongly support the president's choices, and are going to do all we can to push their speedy confirmation by the Senate."

Spokesmen for the senators said they had no immediate comment beyond the statement.

The Kentucky Democratic Party criticized Bush for the Bunning nomination.

"By appointing a U.S. senator's son to the federal bench, Bush seems to be polarizing and politicizing a position that should remain completely nonpartisan," party spokeswoman Susan Dixen said.

David Bunning did not return messages left at his office. Caldwell and Reeves said they were honored by the nominations and declined further comment.

One prominent Eastern Kentucky lawyer criticized all three choices.

"Not one of the three nominees is from Eastern Kentucky. These judgeships are for Ashland, Pikeville and London," said Ned Pillersdorf of Prestonsburg.

But Pillersdorf praised Caldwell's work as an attorney and a federal prosecutor. He said he did not know the younger Bunning, and he objected to the nomination of Reeves, with whom he clashed when Reeves represented Ashland Oil in litigation over environmental damage in an Eastern Kentucky oilfield.

The senators' statement described David Bunning as "a dedicated public servant" who as an assistant U.S. attorney has "accumulated significant courtroom litigation experience."

It said the younger Bunning is responsible for a "wide range of criminal litigation and appeals, and in 1998 he successfully prosecuted one of the first Internet fraud and harassment cases in the nation."

ABA guidelines recommend a minimum of 12 years of experience as a lawyer before someone is considered a qualified candidate for the U.S. District Court bench. Bunning has a decade of experience as an attorney.

It's unclear if the difference will pose a difficulty for confirmation.

Mimi Devlin, spokeswoman for Sen. Patrick Leahy, the Vermont Democrat who chairs the Senate Judiciary Committee, said the committee believes experience is important but that lacking some experience would not disqualify Bunning.

"Senator Leahy values the ABA's opinions on these matters, but this is only a guideline," Devlin said.

Joe Savage, a Lexington attorney and former president of the Kentucky Bar Association, said that although experience is important, "I know lawyers who have practiced five years who have gained a lot more experience than some who have practiced 15 years."

Savage, who said he does not know David Bunning, said he expected the experience issue would not be so serious as to block confirmation.

Edward Drennen, president of the Northern Kentucky Bar Association, said he expected Bunning would be conservative on the bench but also open-minded and fair. "He's always demonstrated in our dealings with him a willingness to listen to both sides," said Drennen, a Florence attorney.

He also said it was unfair to attach nepotism to the nomination.

"His father doesn't try these federal cases, David does," Drennen said. "David writes these briefs to the Court of Appeals."

Mark Guilfoyle, a leading Northern Kentucky Democrat, Covington lawyer and former gubernatorial aide, called Bunning an outstanding pick.

Guilfoyle said too much has been made of Bunning's relative lack of experience. "He has lived in federal court for the last 10 years" trying a wide variety of cases, Guilfoyle said.

Although Guilfoyle said he disagrees with the nominee's father on most issues, he described the younger Bunning as a conservative who is in step with the values of most Kentuckians and "in no way, shape or form an ideologue."

Reno Lawyer Hicks Nominated For U.S. Judge Position

By Jane Ann Morrison
Las Vegas Review-Journal
Friday, August 3, 2001

Reno attorney Larry Hicks, a nominee for a federal judgeship under the first President Bush, lost his opportunity when Bush was defeated in the 1992 election. Now Hicks is a nominee again -- this time by the second President Bush. The White House announced the nomination Thursday and forwarded Hicks' name to the U.S. Senate for confirmation as a U.S. District Court judge.

Hicks, 57, was recommended for the lifetime post in May by U.S. Sen. John Ensign, R-Nev. Ensign submitted four names for two judicial vacancies but declined to say how he ranked them. Sources said Hicks and District Judge Jim Mahan were first in line, followed by Las Vegas attorney Walt Cannon and District Judge Mark Gibbons. Hicks' background investigation moved quickly because he already had undergone such a check nine years ago. Mahan's background investigation isn't complete, but one source said he might gain a presidential nomination in September. The two judgeships are based in Las Vegas.

Although federal judgeships are the top patronage appointment any senator makes, Ensign said he didn't base his decision on political cronyism or payback. Ensign said he didn't know Hicks or his other nominees when he selected them, but he used an informal committee of bipartisan advisers to make his choices. He described Hicks as having 'impeccable character' as well as being a distinguished attorney.

Hicks, a sportsman who enjoys duck hunting, was on a previously planned fishing trip in British Columbia but issued a statement saying he 'couldn't be more excited about the opportunity to serve my country' as a federal judge. A partner in the Reno law firm McDonald Carano Wilson McCune Bergin Frankovich & Hicks, he is a trial attorney with extensive courtroom experience, both prosecutor and as a civil attorney.

He started his legal career in 1971 as the chief criminal deputy district attorney in Washoe County, and was elected district attorney of Washoe County in 1973.

In 1979, he began his career as a partner in his current law firm, where he heads the firm's litigation section. For 16 years, he also has worked as a settlement judge for the Nevada Supreme Court. In an interview in May, Hicks said he represented Dow Chemical in a breast implant case, and as district attorney he investigated brothel owner Joe Conforte and his corrupt influence on elected officials in Northern Nevada. His law partner Thomas 'Spike' Wilson, a Democrat, said Hicks is 'known and respected by his peers' and has wide support in the legal community. When FBI officials interviewed Wilson, he said, he guessed they hadn't received any negative comments about Hicks.

'He works hard, he's diligent, detailed, careful, prepared and he knows the law. He considers factual and legal issues carefully,' said Wilson, a former state senator and former chairman of the Nevada Ethics Commission. Wilson predicted Hicks would win confirmation easily. Wilson described Hicks' politics as 'pretty moderate. I don't see him on either extreme. I think he'll be a mainstream judge who follows legal precedent.'

U.S. Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., issued a news release calling Ensign's pick 'a wise choice' and promised to do 'everything in my power as the majority whip' to get Hicks confirmed quickly. The two senators have agreed to share the judicial appointments no matter which party controls the White House, Ensign said.

He will nominate three judges and then give Reid the fourth choice. If the White House goes Democratic in 2004, Reid agreed to do the same with Ensign.

Bush Nominates Four As Judges, U.S. Attorney

By Christ Casteel
The Daily Oklahoman

Five months after receiving recommendations from Oklahoma's senators, the White House on Thursday nominated four people for federal judgeships in the state.

Also nominated was Robert G. McCampbell to be U.S. attorney for the Western District of Oklahoma, based in Oklahoma City.

President Bush sent to the Senate the following nominations:

- Joe L. Heaton, a former Republican leader in the state House of Representatives, to be a judge in the western district. Heaton is an assistant U.S. attorney and spent nine months as the U.S. attorney. He served seven years in the state House and practiced law with Fuller, Tubb & Pomeroy.
- Stephen P. Friot, an Oklahoma City attorney, to fill another vacancy in the western district. He has been in private practice since 1972. He is a partner in the firm of Spradling, Alpern, Friot & Gum. A 1987 book that ranked the top legal guns in the country included Friot among the Oklahomans.
- Claire V. Eagan to be a judge in the northern district, based in Tulsa. She has been a U.S. magistrate judge for three years in the northern district; for 20 years, she was a litigation attorney with Hall, Estill. During her time as magistrate, she has supervised the court's settlement program.

- James H. Payne to be a judge sharing time in the northern district and eastern district, based in Muskogee. Payne has been a U.S. magistrate judge in the eastern district for 12 years. He spent 15 years in private practice, handling civil matters, and also served three years as an assistant U.S. attorney.

- McCampbell to be U.S. attorney. He is a partner with the law firm Crowe and Dunlevy in Oklahoma City. He served as an assistant U.S. attorney in the western district from 1987 to 1994. He is a graduate of Vanderbilt University and Yale Law School.

Oklahoma's senators applauded the nominations, which will be considered first by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

In regard to the judicial nominations, Sen. Jim Inhofe, R-Tulsa, said, "Senator Nickles and I recommended these individuals based on their superb professional experience and sound judicial philosophy. I am confident they will faithfully uphold the Constitution and serve our state and nation well."

Nickles, R-Ponca City, said McCampbell "is an outstanding individual who will serve the state and the country well."

Bush Is Ahead of Clinton Pace on Nominees

The New York Times

After half a year in office, President Bush has 52 nominees for executive branch positions awaiting Senate confirmation and 211 positions in his administration yet to be named, according to a running count by the Brookings Institution.

With Congress and the White House on vacation for a month, Brookings, a research group, projects that some appointees will not be in place until after Mr. Bush has been in office for a year.

Even March 2002 would be optimistic, said Paul C. Light, vice president and director of governmental studies at Brookings. "At this point, people in the administration are going to be arriving as others in it are departing," Mr. Light said.

The White House puts a somewhat better face on the facts. "I think it's fair to say that even given the shortened transition that this administration has worked from, the personnel and the nomination process have worked exceedingly well from the White House end of Pennsylvania Avenue," said Ari Fleischer, the White House spokesman.

Mr. Fleischer said on Friday that Mr. Bush had nominated 443 people for Senate confirmation, counting not only the nominees for 360 cabinet and subcabinet posts, but also judges, top military officers and ambassadors, whom Brookings does not count in its survey. Brookings says the White House has made nominations for 321 out of 499 positions; 227 of the nominees have been confirmed. Only Mary Sheila Gall, the appointee for the Consumer Product Safety Commission, has been rejected. Since the Democrats took control of the Senate about six weeks ago, 128 nominees have been confirmed. In the Republican-controlled Senate, 99 were confirmed. On Friday the Senate confirmed 38 nominees before adjourning until September.

Compared with two previous presidents who took over the White House from the other party, Bill Clinton and Ronald Reagan, Mr. Bush is ahead of Mr. Clinton's pace but behind Mr. Reagan by 43 confirmations, according to Brookings.

In recent weeks, the new majority leader, Senator Tom Daschle of South Dakota, after meeting with Republican leaders and senior senators, has bypassed hearings for lower-level nominees, sending them directly to the floor for confirmation.

Senate Says Vacation More Important Than Judicial Vacancies According To People For Common Sense Courts

With one of every eight federal judgeships vacant and 40 judicial nominations pending, the United States Senate today took bold action -- and began a month-long vacation.

"Senate leaders showed their true colors today," said Oklahoma Gov. Frank A. Keating, national chairman of People for Common Sense Courts. "By abandoning Washington for a month, they abandoned any hope of resolving the growing judicial crisis any time soon. Obviously, their vacation is more important to them than maintaining a functioning legal system."

There are now 108 vacancies on the federal district and appeals courts, including 39 designated as emergencies because of the enormous number of cases pending. President Bush has nominated 44 individuals to fill these posts; the Senate has confirmed 4. "If the Oklahoma state courts were in this type of crisis and my response was to take a month-long vacation, the voters and the news media would never let me hear the end of it," Keating said.

"In the first years of the past three Administrations, all but one of the judges nominated before the Senate's August recess were confirmed that year," said Andrew R. Stephens, president of People for Common Sense Courts. "That looks increasingly unlikely this year. The Senate is scheduled to be in session for only another 22 days, and it has 40 nominations pending."

"When Democrats controlled the White House and Republicans controlled the Senate, Senate Democrats complained that 67 judicial vacancies was too many," Stephens noted. "Now that party control has changed, their response to 108 vacancies is to drag their feet." During the transition this spring from Republican to Democratic control of the Senate, incoming Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) refused to schedule any judicial confirmation hearings -- even though other Senate committees were holding confirmation hearings.

Before the Senate returns from its August recess, at least one more federal appeals court judge is scheduled to retire -- from the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals, already suffering an emergency because of 6 vacancies. Another four federal judges have announced plans to retire by the end of the year -- in addition to any unexpected retirements, resignations, or deaths.

With the American Bar Association meeting in Chicago today, it is an apt moment to look at the ABA's controversial judicial-evaluation process and consider whether it provides an objective, nonpartisan measure of a judicial nominee's qualifications.

That's what it says it does, a claim echoed by the Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee, who vow not to schedule a nominee's hearing until they have reviewed the ABA's rating. This faith persists despite the White House's decision not to call upon the ABA to pre-screen its judicial nominees, a system that had been used by presidents since the 1950s.

What does the evidence show? I've just completed a statistical study of the ABA's ratings of appointees to the U.S. Courts of Appeals during the Clinton and first Bush administrations and can report that the facts don't support the ABA's claim of objectivity. The ABA may once have been objective, but it's not anymore.

I analyzed the credentials of the 108 nominees who were ultimately appointed to the federal appeals courts during the Clinton and Bush-1 administrations. The results? The ABA applied measurably different and harsher standards during President George H. W. Bush's administration than it applied during President Bill Clinton's tenure. In short, the Bush appointees got lower ABA ratings than the Clinton appointees.

First a word on how the process works. The ABA's 15-member Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary rates judges as "Well Qualified," "Qualified" or "Not Qualified."

Judicial temperament and integrity, two criteria that the ABA considers, are hard to measure. But many credentials can be measured empirically. My study considered six: judicial experience, an elite law school education, law review, a federal court clerkship, private-practice experience, and government-practice experience. The data on the professional qualifications of the 108 judges were collected by the Federalist Society from publicly available sources or directly from the judges. While my study found strong evidence of different treatment of nominees, this isn't a simple story of ABA bias in favor of Clinton nominees. Among nominees with the most important credential -- prior judicial experience -- Clinton and Bush-1 nominees both fared roughly equally.

Instead, the problem arose for nominees without prior judicial experience. Because these candidates lacked the most obvious credential for the job, the ABA evaluations could be more subjective. Here Clinton nominees fared strikingly better than Bush-1 nominees. Some 65% of Clinton appointees without judicial experience were unanimously rated "Well Qualified" compared with only 17% of the Bush-1 appointees. Controlling for credentials, my study found that Clinton nominees had more than 10 times better odds of getting the ABA's highest rating than similarly credentialed Bush appointees. In short, being nominated by Bill Clinton was a stronger positive variable than any other credential or than all other credentials put together.

A Clinton nominee with few of the six credentials I measured had a much better chance of getting the highest ABA rating than a Bush nominee with most of these credentials. For

Rebuffed By White House, ABA Finds It Still Has Role In Judicial Nominations Before Democratic-led Senate

By Anne Gearan

The Associated Press

Saturday, August 4, 2001

Three months into George W. Bush's presidency, the White House fired the American Bar Association from its job doing secret background checks on potential federal judges.

Losing that prestigious role after 50 years left many in the organization of 400,000 lawyers smarting and convinced still that the White House made a rash and largely political decision.

But lawyers gathered for the group's annual meeting said that for now, surprisingly little has changed.

The ABA continues to vet judges, and the newly Democratic-controlled Senate still relies on the ABA's recommendations. The difference is that the ABA does its work after the White House announces the name of a potential judge, instead of beforehand.

"The dynamic has changed, but we're still doing our work," said Bob Hirshon, who will become the ABA president during the six-day meeting.

Actually, the dynamic changed twice: in March when the White House gave the ABA the boot and then in May, when Vermont Sen. James Jeffords' defection from the Republicans gave Democrats control of the Senate.

In one sense, the Senate switch meant the ABA role was just as influential as before, Senate aides said. Democrats had said they would not confirm any Bush judge without an ABA rating, and after the switch they had the muscle to make the warning stick.

York Times

example: A nominee with an elite law school education, law review, a federal clerkship, and experience in both government and private practice would have only a 32% chance of getting the highest ABA rating if he were a Bush appointee, but a 77% chance if he were a Clinton appointee. A Clinton nominee with none or just one of these five credentials would still have at least a 45% chance of getting the highest rating.

The differences in how the ABA treated Bush-1 and Clinton nominees reached even to the internal decision making of the ABA committee. The ratings committee split its vote between two ratings 33% of the time when evaluating Bush-1 appointees, but it split only 17% of the time when evaluating Clinton appointees.

If Clinton nominees had been subjected to the same credentials-driven approach as Bush-1 candidates, only 46% of Clinton's confirmed nominees would have been unanimously rated as "Well Qualified." Instead, 62% actually received that top rating. On average Bush-1 and Clinton nominees had almost identically strong measured qualifications, yet they were not rated similarly.

The data suggest that when Bill Clinton took office, the ABA softened its standards, possibly emphasizing credentials such as temperament and philosophy that are harder to measure than experience and educational success. Now the ABA is back to rating Republican nominees -- and apparently is also back to its old harsh ways. The ABA ratings of George W. Bush's first 11 appellate nominees were released this summer. While it is much too soon to reach any firm conclusions about Bush-2, the pattern so far is not encouraging.

Although 62% of Clinton's 66 confirmed appellate nominees got the ABA's highest rating of unanimously "Well Qualified," only five of the first 11 new Bush nominees -- 45% -- have received the highest ABA rating, the same percentage that confirmed nominees received under the administration of the elder Bush.

At the end of the day, one nagging question remains: Why hasn't the ABA itself noticed the large political differences in its evaluative processes and worked harder to understand, explain or eliminate them? Now that there are hard data that support the claims of its critics, it would be good to see fewer denials and more introspection and reform.

You go ahead, and then we'll come back over here.

Q Okay. Can you talk about the upcoming fight over judicial nominations in the fall and what strategy you guys are going to use to get those through the Senate?

SEN. NICKLES: Well, let me just make a couple of comments. One, the leader gave me a little responsibility on trying to help shepherd some of the nominees through. And I will compliment Senator Reid and Senator Daschle; they have been cooperative. We've encouraged them to let's work together, see if we can't get some through. In the last couple of three weeks we've had some pretty good progress, and we want to continue that. It's not fair for this administration -- they're already --

Q But I'm talking specifically about judicial nominations.

SEN. NICKLES: I understand. I understand. It's not fair for this administration, they still have assistant secretaries that haven't been confirmed, and Cabinet secretaries are entitled to have their nominees confirmed.

Judges. The administration has just now sent -- they sent up the Circuit Court judges and they haven't been considered totally through the Judiciary Committee. Hopefully they will be. The administration is right now in the process of sending District Court judges through, and we're encouraging them to hurry up and get those, and they've been held up because of the FBI background checks and so on. But we hope and expect that the Judiciary Committee will work with all senators to get these judges in. We've got a lot of judges that are waiting, a lot of U.S. Attorneys, a lot of Marshals that have not been confirmed, that need to be confirmed. They should have been confirmed, frankly, in many cases by now, but we haven't got the nominations yet from the administration. So I'm not just faulting the Judiciary Committee, except for some of the Circuit Courts, they've been kind of slow on Circuit Court.

SEN. LOTT: Let me just give you some numbers, and be honest. First of all, I think that we should have had the U.S. Attorneys and U.S. Marshal nominees already pending before the Senate. They're not here, so you can't be critical of the Democrats for not moving that.

With regard to judges, I believe it's right that there have only been four federal marshals confirmed --

SEN. NICKLES: Judges.

SEN. LOTT: -- federal judges confirmed by the Senate.

SEN. NICKLES: Five.

SEN. LOTT: Did we do two yesterday?

SEN. NICKLES: Five. We did two yesterday.

SEN. LOTT: Okay, five. And we still have pending in the Judiciary Committee 26 maybe?

SEN. NICKLES: Twenty-something. Yeah.

SEN. LOTT: And several of them, about 10 or so, have been here since I believe May.

SEN. NICKLES: April, May, yeah.

SEN. LOTT: I mean, so there could have been hearings. And I don't believe they've even had hearings on most of them.

Now, the administration I believe will be sending a block of probably 50 or 60 nominations here momentarily, in the next few days, and those will be pending. So we really need to start moving aggressively on having hearings and reporting out judicial nominees, both judges and U.S. attorneys when we come back in September.

SEN. NICKLES: And the great majority of these will not even be controversial.

SEN. LOTT: That's right.

SEN. NICKLES: The great majority of these will be supported by both senator from their home states, and we expect those can go through pretty quickly.

Q Senator Lott.

Q Senator Lott, you know, last week, President Bush has backed the sons of Senator Jim Bunning and also the son of Strom Thurmond for judicial nominations for judgeships. Is he trying to win influence with the Senate through appointing people's relatives?

SEN. LOTT: I can't believe a president would be trying to win influence with the Senate! Every president does that. But also, he is prepared to select good men and women for federal positions, even if they are the sons and daughters of senators or judges for that matter. I know Strom Thurmond Jr. This is a 28-year-old, extremely sharp, very intelligent young lawyers with prosecutory (sic) experience. I'd pick him. And there are others. You know, Justice Rehnquist's daughter has been selected for a position in the administration. She is, from all accounts, a brilliant person who will do an excellent job. I don't think that ought to guarantee you'll be nominated or confirmed, but neither should it be prohibitive.

"It has been the committee's practice to (rely) on ABA ratings, and that has not changed," said David Carle, spokesman for Judiciary Chairman Sen. Patrick Leahy, a Democrat.

"There would have been a change if the Republicans were still in control. At least some Republicans were apparently willing to proceed without ABA ratings," Carle said.

In another sense, the ABA's role is fundamentally different. Before, most presidents quietly killed a nomination if the ABA found the candidate unqualified, and the name never became public.

That gave the ABA unparalleled veto power over White House decisions, said Leonard Leo, a vice president of the conservative Federalist Society.

Conservatives long have viewed the ABA with suspicion. Congressional Republicans, in particular, tend to perceive the organization as liberal-leaning, and blame a mixed ABA review of Robert Bork for defeat of the conservative nominated for the Supreme Court.

The ABA rejects the liberal label. The organization's leaders say there is a high wall between policy positions and its work evaluating judges. The ABA has lobbied for abortion rights and gun control.

"The decision by the White House cast a lot of light on the process, and caused people to think about the ABA's role," Leo said. "I think the jury is still out as to whether the role they play is valuable or not."

Many Federalist Society members are now advising Bush on judicial nominees, and several of its members were among Bush's initial crop of judicial picks.

The society's skeptical review of ABA activities, called "ABA Watch," this month includes a comparison of ABA ratings for Clinton administration appeals court nominees and those nominated by the first President George Bush.

The Federalist Society study found that when it came to nominees with similar legal experience, the Clinton choices were at least seven times more likely to win the highest "well-qualified" ABA rating.

Northwestern University law professor James Lindgren, who did the analysis, also looked at some of the first nominees from the current Bush administration, Leo said.

"We are seeing some of the same patterns, although the patterns are not as stark," Leo said.

The ABA has finished its investigations of 17 of Bush's first 44 nominees for federal trial and appeals courts, and has taken about the same time to prepare the reports as it did before, ABA leaders and Senate aides said.

So far, the ABA has rated each candidate "qualified" or "well-qualified."

"We may not know the answer to this question for awhile _ whether the information we receive when a name is in the public domain is the same versus the information we received the last 50 years," the ABA's Hirshon said.

The ABA maintains that so long as the potential nominee's name was not yet public, friends or co-workers can speak without risk of retribution and without publicly sully a nominee's reputation.

Although she was blindsided by the White House decision in March, current ABA president Martha Barnett now sounds sanguine about the change.

"This is one of those issues that created angst in the beginning, but has now worked out well and is a non-issue," she said.

Despite partisan wrangling over a new batch of White House nominations, the Senate on Thursday gave quick and unanimous approval to one of President Bush's most closely watched picks as it confirmed San Francisco prosecutor Robert S. Mueller to lead the besieged FBI.

Mueller, 56, will take over an agency that has seen its reputation as the nation's premier law enforcement agency badly tarnished by recent episodes of espionage, witness intimidation, lost documents, missing weapons and other embarrassments within its ranks.

"We know he has a difficult job ahead of him," said Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, as he ticked off a list of recent blunders at the FBI.

But Leahy said Mueller, a veteran prosecutor credited with turning around the U.S. attorney's office in San Francisco after his appointment there in 1998, is the right man for the job. "I applaud President Bush for his appointment," the senator said.

Leahy's committee gave Mueller a unanimous vote of approval Thursday after two days of hearings earlier in the week that were marked by unstinting praise for Mueller and widespread condemnation of the FBI. Hours after the committee vote, the full Senate approved Mueller for the job on a 98-0 vote.

Mueller soon will undergo surgery for prostate cancer, and no date has been set for his takeover at the FBI, although Justice Department aides indicated it might not happen for several weeks.

Atty. Gen. John Ashcroft, who lobbied hard for the former Marine, said that Mueller "will serve with fidelity, bravery and integrity" and that his background in criminal law brings "an invaluable perspective to the Department of Justice."

Mueller's confirmation followed the Senate's approval earlier this week of Rep. Asa Hutchinson (R-Ark.) as head of the Drug Enforcement Administration and former Senate Sergeant-at-Arms James Ziglar as head of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

But the votes came amid stepped-up political bickering Thursday over some of Bush's other nominations.

Democrats on the Senate Commerce Committee voted down Bush's pick of Mary Sheila Gall as head of the Consumer Product Safety Commission. And a new round of judicial nominations by the White House set off a round of political accusations.

The White House nominated 18 federal judges Thursday, including 15 for seats on district courts and three for the federal claims court.

The selections were concentrated in states that have two Republican senators, with four judges nominated in Oklahoma and three in Kentucky. In states such as California and New York, where both senators are Democrats and the effort to find acceptable candidates may prove more protracted, the White House does not expect to nominate judicial candidates until the fall.

Bush administration officials immediately warned Senate Democrats that they have become frustrated with what they consider unnecessary delays in considering the White House's judicial nominations, which now total 44.

Administration officials complained that, while they have been quick to nominate judges at a rate outpacing those of past presidencies, the Democratic-controlled Senate has approved only four judges so far and has not even scheduled hearings for many candidates. Many districts remain short of judges as a result, Bush advisors said.

"There's really in the administration's view no legitimate justification--given the vacancy crisis--for all these weeks to have passed without hearings," said a senior administration official who asked not to be identified. Bush "expects and is entitled to the same fair treatment for his nominees" as past presidents have received, the official said.

But Leahy said the Judiciary Committee has pushed through the nominations of Mueller and other candidates at a very quick pace, and his aides said the White House has slowed the process by limiting the American Bar Assn.'s traditional role in reviewing nominees.

One of Thursday's judicial nominations who could prove controversial is David Bunning, a 35-year-old assistant U.S. attorney in Kentucky tapped for the federal bench there. Bunning is the son of Sen. Jim Bunning (R-Ky.), and his nomination came a day after Bush nominated Strom

Thurmond Jr., the 28-year-old son of the Senate's senior member, to be the U.S. attorney in South Carolina.

Bunning has been a lawyer for 10 years, two years less than the ABA generally recommends for a lifetime appointment to the federal bench.

Ralph Neas, head of People for the American Way, a liberal public-interest group that has criticized Bush for allegedly trying to pack the courts with "right-wing ideologues," said he wants the Bunning nomination to get a close look.

"Thirty-five years old is very young, and I think it's a legitimate issue to question whether this nominee has the qualifications needed to be a federal judge," he said.

But Bush administration officials said Bunning has a proven record as a prosecutor and is well qualified for the job.

Pitch Made For Approval Of Judicial Nominees

By Tom Brune

Newsday

President George W. Bush is "entitled" to have all of the judicial candidates he has nominated so far confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate by the end of the year, an administration official said yesterday.

The Bush administration official made that claim in announcing 16 new judicial nominations while blasting the Senate Judiciary Committee for failing to act more quickly on judicial candidates Bush has nominated in the past three months.

Administration officials also said they expect to nominate candidates to fill the more than 100 vacancies on the federal bench by the end of the year, which would put a distinctly Republican stamp on the federal judiciary.

Included among yesterday's nominees is the 35-year-old son of Sen. Jim Bunning (R-Ky.) to be a federal judge in Kentucky. On Wednesday, Bush tapped the 29-year-old son of Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) to be U.S. attorney of South Carolina.

Since May, Bush has nominated 44 candidates for the federal bench, and the Senate has confirmed three nominees and appeared likely to confirm a fourth before going on a monthlong recess after today.

An aide to Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) rejected criticism of the pace of the committee's confirmation hearings. "Any fair look at this committee's schedule for the past month shows how brisk it has been," said Leahy spokesman David Carle, noting that it had expedited hearings of the nominees for directors of the FBI and Drug Enforcement Agency.

Carle also refrained from making any promises that all of the Bush judicial nominees would be confirmed by year's end. "It depends on what nominees the president sends," he said.

Bush officials stepped up pressure on Senate Democrats to approve more judicial candidates yesterday after the Senate Commerce Committee, in a separate action, handed Bush his first defeat of a nominee - rejecting his choice for Consumer Product Safety Commission chairman.

"In the past three administrations, there has been a very long-standing bipartisan tradition of [judicial] nominees who were named prior to the August recess being confirmed in the first year of their presidency," said White House spokesman Ari Fleischer.

"Consistent with that bipartisan history, the president hopes and urges that the Senate will move forward and act on all 44 of his [judicial] nominations this year," he said.

Another administration official, speaking on the condition he not be named, however, went further, saying, "We expect and we are entitled to and we would be satisfied if the . . . judges were confirmed."

Most of those nominated yesterday were from states represented by two Republican senators.

Nominated for the First Circuit of Appeals was Jeffrey R. Howard, who came in third in the Republican primary for governor of New Hampshire last year and whose campaign consultant was cited by state officials for improper campaign activities. Howard is a former U.S. attorney and New Hampshire attorney general.

Nominated for the 10th Circuit of Appeals was Terrence L. O'Brien, who after retiring as a Wyoming state court judge won the Republican nomination for a congressional seat as a write-in candidate, but then withdrew before the general election last year.

Nominated for the Eastern District of Kentucky was David Bunning, who since 1991 has been a federal prosecutor.

Meanwhile, Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) used a procedural maneuver to delay the nomination of Deborah Daniels as assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Justice Programs because he said she has not sufficiently answered questions about how she would manage the agency's gun programs. The committee may take up the Daniels nomination in September, when Congress returns from its August recess.

Three Nominees Likely To Win U.S. Judgeships, Lawyers Say Bunning's Son May Face Scrutiny On His Experience

President Bush's three federal judgeship nominees for Kentucky, including the son of U.S. Sen. Jim Bunning, are likely to win Senate confirmation, several prominent Kentucky attorneys said yesterday.

But the experience of David Bunning may get close scrutiny at Senate Judiciary Committee confirmation hearings. The 35-year-old son of the junior senator from Kentucky is a federal prosecutor in Covington.

If confirmed, David Bunning would be the youngest lawyer appointed a federal judge in Kentucky since the American Bar Association began evaluating nominees in 1948. The timetable for confirmation hearings is uncertain.

The other nominees were two Lexington lawyers: Karen Caldwell, 45, a former U.S. attorney who helped oversee the federal investigation of public corruption known as Operation BOPTR0T; and Danny Reeves, 44, who has represented Ashland Oil and the Kentucky High School Athletic Association.

Appointments to federal judgeships are for life and are viewed as prize political plums. Traditionally, presidents closely follow the recommendations of the U.S. senators from their party in making appointments for a particular state.

The elder Bunning and fellow Republican Sen. Mitch McConnell announced the nominations in a statement that did not take note of the relationship between the Bunnings. It described the three as "talented and experienced Kentuckians. . . . We strongly support the president's choices, and are going to do all we can to push their speedy confirmation by the Senate."

Spokesmen for the senators said they had no immediate comment beyond the statement.

The Kentucky Democratic Party criticized Bush for the Bunning nomination.

"By appointing a U.S. senator's son to the federal bench, Bush seems to be polarizing and politicizing a position that should remain completely nonpartisan," party spokeswoman Susan Dixen said.

David Bunning did not return messages left at his office. Caldwell and Reeves said they were honored by the nominations and declined further comment.

One prominent Eastern Kentucky lawyer criticized all three choices.

"Not one of the three nominees is from Eastern Kentucky. These judgeships are for Ashland, Pikeville and London," said Ned Pillersdorf of Prestonsburg.

But Pillersdorf praised Caldwell's work as an attorney and a federal prosecutor. He said he did not know the younger Bunning, and he objected to the nomination of Reeves, with whom he clashed when Reeves represented Ashland Oil in litigation over environmental damage in an Eastern Kentucky oilfield.

The senators' statement described David Bunning as "a dedicated public servant" who as an assistant U.S. attorney has "accumulated significant courtroom litigation experience."

It said the younger Bunning is responsible for a "wide range of criminal litigation and appeals, and in 1998 he successfully prosecuted one of the first Internet fraud and harassment cases in the nation."

ABA guidelines recommend a minimum of 12 years of experience as a lawyer before someone is considered a qualified candidate for the U.S. District Court bench. Bunning has a decade of experience as an attorney.

It's unclear if the difference will pose a difficulty for confirmation.

Mimi Devlin, spokeswoman for Sen. Patrick Leahy, the Vermont Democrat who chairs the Senate Judiciary Committee, said the committee believes experience is important but that lacking some experience would not disqualify Bunning.

"Senator Leahy values the ABA's opinions on these matters, but this is only a guideline," Devlin said.

Joe Savage, a Lexington attorney and former president of the Kentucky Bar Association, said that although experience is important, "I know lawyers who have practiced five years who have gained a lot more experience than some who have practiced 15 years."

Savage, who said he does not know David Bunning, said he expected the experience issue would not be so serious as to block confirmation.

Edward Drennen, president of the Northern Kentucky Bar Association, said he expected Bunning would be conservative on the bench but also open-minded and fair. "He's always demonstrated in our dealings with him a willingness to listen to both sides," said Drennen, a Florence attorney.

He also said it was unfair to attach nepotism to the nomination.

"His father doesn't try these federal cases, David does," Drennen said. "David writes these briefs to the Court of Appeals."

Mark Guilfoyle, a leading Northern Kentucky Democrat, Covington lawyer and former gubernatorial aide, called Bunning an outstanding pick.

Guilfoyle said too much has been made of Bunning's relative lack of experience. "He has lived in federal court for the last 10 years" trying a wide variety of cases, Guilfoyle said.

Although Guilfoyle said he disagrees with the nominee's father on most issues, he described the younger Bunning as a conservative who is in step with the values of most Kentuckians and "in no way, shape or form an ideologue."

Reno Lawyer Hicks Nominated For U.S. Judge Position

By Jane Ann Morrison
Las Vegas Review-Journal
Friday, August 3, 2001

Reno attorney Larry Hicks, a nominee for a federal judgeship under the first President Bush, lost his opportunity when Bush was defeated in the 1992 election. Now Hicks is a nominee again -- this time by the second President Bush. The White House announced the nomination Thursday and forwarded Hicks' name to the U.S. Senate for confirmation as a U.S. District Court judge.

Hicks, 57, was recommended for the lifetime post in May by U.S. Sen. John Ensign, R-Nev. Ensign submitted four names for two judicial vacancies but declined to say how he ranked them. Sources said Hicks and District Judge Jim Mahan were first in line, followed by Las Vegas attorney Walt Cannon and District Judge Mark Gibbons. Hicks' background investigation moved quickly because he already had undergone such a check nine years ago. Mahan's background investigation isn't complete, but one source said he might gain a presidential nomination in September. The two judgeships are based in Las Vegas.

Although federal judgeships are the top patronage appointment any senator makes, Ensign said he didn't base his decision on political cronyism or payback. Ensign said he didn't know Hicks or his other nominees when he selected them, but he used an informal committee of bipartisan advisers to make his choices. He described Hicks as having 'impeccable character' as well as being a distinguished attorney.

Hicks, a sportsman who enjoys duck hunting, was on a previously planned fishing trip in British Columbia but issued a statement saying he 'couldn't be more excited about the opportunity to serve my country' as a federal judge. A partner in the Reno law firm McDonald Carano Wilson McCune Bergin Frankovich & Hicks, he is a trial attorney with extensive courtroom experience, both prosecutor and as a civil attorney.

He started his legal career in 1971 as the chief criminal deputy district attorney in Washoe County, and was elected district attorney of Washoe County in 1973.

In 1979, he began his career as a partner in his current law firm, where he heads the firm's litigation section. For 16 years, he also has worked as a settlement judge for the Nevada Supreme Court. In an interview in May, Hicks said he represented Dow Chemical in a breast implant case, and as district attorney he investigated brothel owner Joe Conforte and his corrupt influence on elected officials in Northern Nevada. His law partner Thomas 'Spike' Wilson, a Democrat, said Hicks is 'known and respected by his peers' and has wide support in the legal community. When FBI officials interviewed Wilson, he said, he guessed they hadn't received any negative comments about Hicks.

'He works hard, he's diligent, detailed, careful, prepared and he knows the law. He considers factual and legal issues carefully,' said Wilson, a former state senator and former chairman of the Nevada Ethics Commission. Wilson predicted Hicks would win confirmation easily. Wilson described Hicks' politics as 'pretty moderate. I don't see him on either extreme. I think he'll be a mainstream judge who follows legal precedent.'

U.S. Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., issued a news release calling Ensign's pick 'a wise choice' and promised to do 'everything in my power as the majority whip' to get Hicks confirmed quickly. The two senators have agreed to share the judicial appointments no matter which party controls the White House, Ensign said.

He will nominate three judges and then give Reid the fourth choice. If the White House goes Democratic in 2004, Reid agreed to do the same with Ensign.

Bush Nominates Four As Judges, U.S. Attorney

By Christ Casteel
The Daily Oklahoman

Five months after receiving recommendations from Oklahoma's senators, the White House on Thursday nominated four people for federal judgeships in the state.

Also nominated was Robert G. McCampbell to be U.S. attorney for the Western District of Oklahoma, based in Oklahoma City.

President Bush sent to the Senate the following nominations:

- Joe L. Heaton, a former Republican leader in the state House of Representatives, to be a judge in the western district. Heaton is an assistant U.S. attorney and spent nine months as the U.S. attorney. He served seven years in the state House and practiced law with Fuller, Tubb & Pomeroy.
- Stephen P. Friot, an Oklahoma City attorney, to fill another vacancy in the western district. He has been in private practice since 1972. He is a partner in the firm of Spradling, Alpern, Friot & Gum. A 1987 book that ranked the top legal guns in the country included Friot among the Oklahomans.
- Claire V. Eagan to be a judge in the northern district, based in Tulsa. She has been a U.S. magistrate judge for three years in the northern district; for 20 years, she was a litigation attorney with Hall, Estill. During her time as magistrate, she has supervised the court's settlement program.

- James H. Payne to be a judge sharing time in the northern district and eastern district, based in Muskogee. Payne has been a U.S. magistrate judge in the eastern district for 12 years. He spent 15 years in private practice, handling civil matters, and also served three years as an assistant U.S. attorney.

- McCampbell to be U.S. attorney. He is a partner with the law firm Crowe and Dunlevy in Oklahoma City. He served as an assistant U.S. attorney in the western district from 1987 to 1994. He is a graduate of Vanderbilt University and Yale Law School.

Oklahoma's senators applauded the nominations, which will be considered first by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

In regard to the judicial nominations, Sen. Jim Inhofe, R-Tulsa, said, "Senator Nickles and I recommended these individuals based on their superb professional experience and sound judicial philosophy. I am confident they will faithfully uphold the Constitution and serve our state and nation well."

Nickles, R-Ponca City, said McCampbell "is an outstanding individual who will serve the state and the country well."

Bush Is Ahead of Clinton Pace on Nominees

The New York Times

Monday, August 6, 2001

After half a year in office, President Bush has 52 nominees for executive branch positions awaiting Senate confirmation and 211 positions in his administration yet to be named, according to a running count by the Brookings Institution.

With Congress and the White House on vacation for a month, Brookings, a research group, projects that some appointees will not be in place until after Mr. Bush has been in office for a year.

Even March 2002 would be optimistic, said Paul C. Light, vice president and director of governmental studies at Brookings. "At this point, people in the administration are going to be arriving as others in it are departing," Mr. Light said.

The White House puts a somewhat better face on the facts. "I think it's fair to say that even given the shortened transition that this administration has worked from, the personnel and the nomination process have worked exceedingly well from the White House end of Pennsylvania Avenue," said Ari Fleischer, the White House spokesman.

Mr. Fleischer said on Friday that Mr. Bush had nominated 443 people for Senate confirmation, counting not only the nominees for 360 cabinet and subcabinet posts, but also judges, top military officers and ambassadors, whom Brookings does not count in its survey. Brookings says the White House has made nominations for 321 out of 499 positions; 227 of the nominees have been confirmed. Only Mary Sheila Gall, the appointee for the Consumer Product Safety Commission, has been rejected. Since the Democrats took control of the Senate about six weeks ago, 128 nominees have been confirmed. In the Republican-controlled Senate, 99 were confirmed. On Friday the Senate confirmed 38 nominees before adjourning until September.

Compared with two previous presidents who took over the White House from the other party, Bill Clinton and Ronald Reagan, Mr. Bush is ahead of Mr. Clinton's pace but behind Mr. Reagan by 43 confirmations, according to Brookings.

In recent weeks, the new majority leader, Senator Tom Daschle of South Dakota, after meeting with Republican leaders and senior senators, has bypassed hearings for lower-level nominees, sending them directly to the floor for confirmation.

Senate Says Vacation More Important Than Judicial Vacancies According To People For Common Sense Courts

With one of every eight federal judgeships vacant and 40 judicial nominations pending, the United States Senate today took bold action -- and began a month-long vacation.

"Senate leaders showed their true colors today," said Oklahoma Gov. Frank A. Keating, national chairman of People for Common Sense Courts. "By abandoning Washington for a month, they abandoned any hope of resolving the growing judicial crisis any time soon. Obviously, their vacation is more important to them than maintaining a functioning legal system."

There are now 108 vacancies on the federal district and appeals courts, including 39 designated as emergencies because of the enormous number of cases pending. President Bush has nominated 44 individuals to fill these posts; the Senate has confirmed 4. "If the Oklahoma state courts were in this type of crisis and my response was to take a month-long vacation, the voters and the news media would never let me hear the end of it," Keating said.

"In the first years of the past three Administrations, all but one of the judges nominated before the Senate's August recess were confirmed that year," said Andrew R. Stephens, president of People for Common Sense Courts. "That looks increasingly unlikely this year. The Senate is scheduled to be in session for only another 22 days, and it has 40 nominations pending."

"When Democrats controlled the White House and Republicans controlled the Senate, Senate Democrats complained that 67 judicial vacancies was too many," Stephens noted. "Now that party control has changed, their response to 108 vacancies is to drag their feet." During the transition this spring from Republican to Democratic control of the Senate, incoming Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) refused to schedule any judicial confirmation hearings -- even though other Senate committees were holding confirmation hearings.

Before the Senate returns from its August recess, at least one more federal appeals court judge is scheduled to retire -- from the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals, already suffering an emergency because of 6 vacancies. Another four federal judges have announced plans to retire by the end of the year -- in addition to any unexpected retirements, resignations, or deaths.

With the American Bar Association meeting in Chicago today, it is an apt moment to look at the ABA's controversial judicial-evaluation process and consider whether it provides an objective, nonpartisan measure of a judicial nominee's qualifications.

That's what it says it does, a claim echoed by the Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee, who vow not to schedule a nominee's hearing until they have reviewed the ABA's rating. This faith persists despite the White House's decision not to call upon the ABA to pre-screen its judicial nominees, a system that had been used by presidents since the 1950s.

What does the evidence show? I've just completed a statistical study of the ABA's ratings of appointees to the U.S. Courts of Appeals during the Clinton and first Bush administrations and can report that the facts don't support the ABA's claim of objectivity. The ABA may once have been objective, but it's not anymore.

I analyzed the credentials of the 108 nominees who were ultimately appointed to the federal appeals courts during the Clinton and Bush-1 administrations. The results? The ABA applied measurably different and harsher standards during President George H. W. Bush's administration than it applied during President Bill Clinton's tenure. In short, the Bush appointees got lower ABA ratings than the Clinton appointees.

First a word on how the process works. The ABA's 15-member Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary rates judges as "Well Qualified," "Qualified" or "Not Qualified."

Judicial temperament and integrity, two criteria that the ABA considers, are hard to measure. But many credentials can be measured empirically. My study considered six: judicial experience, an elite law school education, law review, a federal court clerkship, private-practice experience, and government-practice experience. The data on the professional qualifications of the 108 judges were collected by the Federalist Society from publicly available sources or directly from the judges. While my study found strong evidence of different treatment of nominees, this isn't a simple story of ABA bias in favor of Clinton nominees. Among nominees with the most important credential -- prior judicial experience -- Clinton and Bush-1 nominees both fared roughly equally.

Instead, the problem arose for nominees without prior judicial experience. Because these candidates lacked the most obvious credential for the job, the ABA evaluations could be more subjective. Here Clinton nominees fared strikingly better than Bush-1 nominees. Some 65% of Clinton appointees without judicial experience were unanimously rated "Well Qualified" compared with only 17% of the Bush-1 appointees. Controlling for credentials, my study found that Clinton nominees had more than 10 times better odds of getting the ABA's highest rating than similarly credentialed Bush appointees. In short, being nominated by Bill Clinton was a stronger positive variable than any other credential or than all other credentials put together.

A Clinton nominee with few of the six credentials I measured had a much better chance of getting the highest ABA rating than a Bush nominee with most of these credentials. For

Rebuffed By White House, ABA Finds It Still Has Role In Judicial Nominations Before Democratic-led Senate

By Anne Gearan

The Associated Press

Saturday, August 4, 2001

Three months into George W. Bush's presidency, the White House fired the American Bar Association from its job doing secret background checks on potential federal judges.

Losing that prestigious role after 50 years left many in the organization of 400,000 lawyers smarting and convinced still that the White House made a rash and largely political decision.

But lawyers gathered for the group's annual meeting said that for now, surprisingly little has changed.

The ABA continues to vet judges, and the newly Democratic-controlled Senate still relies on the ABA's recommendations. The difference is that the ABA does its work after the White House announces the name of a potential judge, instead of beforehand.

"The dynamic has changed, but we're still doing our work," said Bob Hirshon, who will become the ABA president during the six-day meeting.

Actually, the dynamic changed twice: in March when the White House gave the ABA the boot and then in May, when Vermont Sen. James Jeffords' defection from the Republicans gave Democrats control of the Senate.

In one sense, the Senate switch meant the ABA role was just as influential as before, Senate aides said. Democrats had said they would not confirm any Bush judge without an ABA rating, and after the switch they had the muscle to make the warning stick.

example: A nominee with an elite law school education, law review, a federal clerkship, and experience in both government and private practice would have only a 32% chance of getting the highest ABA rating if he were a Bush appointee, but a 77% chance if he were a Clinton appointee. A Clinton nominee with none or just one of these five credentials would still have at least a 45% chance of getting the highest rating.

The differences in how the ABA treated Bush-1 and Clinton nominees reached even to the internal decision making of the ABA committee. The ratings committee split its vote between two ratings 33% of the time when evaluating Bush-1 appointees, but it split only 17% of the time when evaluating Clinton appointees.

If Clinton nominees had been subjected to the same credentials-driven approach as Bush-1 candidates, only 46% of Clinton's confirmed nominees would have been unanimously rated as "Well Qualified." Instead, 62% actually received that top rating. On average Bush-1 and Clinton nominees had almost identically strong measured qualifications, yet they were not rated similarly.

The data suggest that when Bill Clinton took office, the ABA softened its standards, possibly emphasizing credentials such as temperament and philosophy that are harder to measure than experience and educational success. Now the ABA is back to rating Republican nominees -- and apparently is also back to its old harsh ways. The ABA ratings of George W. Bush's first 11 appellate nominees were released this summer. While it is much too soon to reach any firm conclusions about Bush-2, the pattern so far is not encouraging.

Although 62% of Clinton's 66 confirmed appellate nominees got the ABA's highest rating of unanimously "Well Qualified," only five of the first 11 new Bush nominees -- 45% -- have received the highest ABA rating, the same percentage that confirmed nominees received under the administration of the elder Bush.

At the end of the day, one nagging question remains: Why hasn't the ABA itself noticed the large political differences in its evaluative processes and worked harder to understand, explain or eliminate them? Now that there are hard data that support the claims of its critics, it would be good to see fewer denials and more introspection and reform.

You go ahead, and then we'll come back over here.

Q Okay. Can you talk about the upcoming fight over judicial nominations in the fall and what strategy you guys are going to use to get those through the Senate?

SEN. NICKLES: Well, let me just make a couple of comments. One, the leader gave me a little responsibility on trying to help shepherd some of the nominees through. And I will compliment Senator Reid and Senator Daschle; they have been cooperative. We've encouraged them to let's work together, see if we can't get some through. In the last couple of three weeks we've had some pretty good progress, and we want to continue that. It's not fair for this administration -- they're already --

Q But I'm talking specifically about judicial nominations.

SEN. NICKLES: I understand. I understand. It's not fair for this administration, they still have assistant secretaries that haven't been confirmed, and Cabinet secretaries are entitled to have their nominees confirmed.

Judges. The administration has just now sent -- they sent up the Circuit Court judges and they haven't been considered totally through the Judiciary Committee. Hopefully they will be. The administration is right now in the process of sending District Court judges through, and we're encouraging them to hurry up and get those, and they've been held up because of the FBI background checks and so on. But we hope and expect that the Judiciary Committee will work with all senators to get these judges in. We've got a lot of judges that are waiting, a lot of U.S. Attorneys, a lot of Marshals that have not been confirmed, that need to be confirmed. They should have been confirmed, frankly, in many cases by now, but we haven't got the nominations yet from the administration. So I'm not just faulting the Judiciary Committee, except for some of the Circuit Courts, they've been kind of slow on Circuit Court.

SEN. LOTT: Let me just give you some numbers, and be honest. First of all, I think that we should have had the U.S. Attorneys and U.S. Marshal nominees already pending before the Senate. They're not here, so you can't be critical of the Democrats for not moving that.

With regard to judges, I believe it's right that there have only been four federal marshals confirmed --

SEN. NICKLES: Judges.

SEN. LOTT: -- federal judges confirmed by the Senate.

SEN. NICKLES: Five.

SEN. LOTT: Did we do two yesterday?

SEN. NICKLES: Five. We did two yesterday.

SEN. LOTT: Okay, five. And we still have pending in the Judiciary Committee 26 maybe?

SEN. NICKLES: Twenty-something. Yeah.

SEN. LOTT: And several of them, about 10 or so, have been here since I believe May.

SEN. NICKLES: April, May, yeah.

SEN. LOTT: I mean, so there could have been hearings. And I don't believe they've even had hearings on most of them.

Now, the administration I believe will be sending a block of probably 50 or 60 nominations here momentarily, in the next few days, and those will be pending. So we really need to start moving aggressively on having hearings and reporting out judicial nominees, both judges and U.S. attorneys when we come back in September.

SEN. NICKLES: And the great majority of these will not even be controversial.

SEN. LOTT: That's right.

SEN. NICKLES: The great majority of these will be supported by both senator from their home states, and we expect those can go through pretty quickly.

Q Senator Lott.

Q Senator Lott, you know, last week, President Bush has backed the sons of Senator Jim Bunning and also the son of Strom Thurmond for judicial nominations for judgeships. Is he trying to win influence with the Senate through appointing people's relatives?

SEN. LOTT: I can't believe a president would be trying to win influence with the Senate! Every president does that. But also, he is prepared to select good men and women for federal positions, even if they are the sons and daughters of senators or judges for that matter. I know Strom Thurmond Jr. This is a 28-year-old, extremely sharp, very intelligent young lawyers with prosecutory (sic) experience. I'd pick him. And there are others. You know, Justice Rehnquist's daughter has been selected for a position in the administration. She is, from all accounts, a brilliant person who will do an excellent job. I don't think that ought to guarantee you'll be nominated or confirmed, but neither should it be prohibitive.

"It has been the committee's practice to (rely) on ABA ratings, and that has not changed," said David Carle, spokesman for Judiciary Chairman Sen. Patrick Leahy, a Democrat.

"There would have been a change if the Republicans were still in control. At least some Republicans were apparently willing to proceed without ABA ratings," Carle said.

In another sense, the ABA's role is fundamentally different. Before, most presidents quietly killed a nomination if the ABA found the candidate unqualified, and the name never became public.

That gave the ABA unparalleled veto power over White House decisions, said Leonard Leo, a vice president of the conservative Federalist Society.

Conservatives long have viewed the ABA with suspicion. Congressional Republicans, in particular, tend to perceive the organization as liberal-leaning, and blame a mixed ABA review of Robert Bork for defeat of the conservative nominated for the Supreme Court.

The ABA rejects the liberal label. The organization's leaders say there is a high wall between policy positions and its work evaluating judges. The ABA has lobbied for abortion rights and gun control.

"The decision by the White House cast a lot of light on the process, and caused people to think about the ABA's role," Leo said. "I think the jury is still out as to whether the role they play is valuable or not."

Many Federalist Society members are now advising Bush on judicial nominees, and several of its members were among Bush's initial crop of judicial picks.

The society's skeptical review of ABA activities, called "ABA Watch," this month includes a comparison of ABA ratings for Clinton administration appeals court nominees and those nominated by the first President George Bush.

The Federalist Society study found that when it came to nominees with similar legal experience, the Clinton choices were at least seven times more likely to win the highest "well-qualified" ABA rating.

Northwestern University law professor James Lindgren, who did the analysis, also looked at some of the first nominees from the current Bush administration, Leo said.

"We are seeing some of the same patterns, although the patterns are not as stark," Leo said.

The ABA has finished its investigations of 17 of Bush's first 44 nominees for federal trial and appeals courts, and has taken about the same time to prepare the reports as it did before, ABA leaders and Senate aides said.

So far, the ABA has rated each candidate "qualified" or "well-qualified."

"We may not know the answer to this question for awhile _ whether the information we receive when a name is in the public domain is the same versus the information we received the last 50 years," the ABA's Hirshon said.

The ABA maintains that so long as the potential nominee's name was not yet public, friends or co-workers can speak without risk of retribution and without publicly sully a nominee's reputation.

Although she was blindsided by the White House decision in March, current ABA president Martha Barnett now sounds sanguine about the change.

"This is one of those issues that created angst in the beginning, but has now worked out well and is a non-issue," she said.

United Senate Confirms Mueller To Head FBI; Selection: Unanimous Vote Cements Bush's Nomination. Bickering Over Nominees For Other Posts Gets Worse

Despite partisan wrangling over a new batch of White House nominations, the Senate on Thursday gave quick and unanimous approval to one of President Bush's most closely watched picks as it confirmed San Francisco prosecutor Robert S. Mueller to lead the besieged FBI.

Mueller, 56, will take over an agency that has seen its reputation as the nation's premier law enforcement agency badly tarnished by recent episodes of espionage, witness intimidation, lost documents, missing weapons and other embarrassments within its ranks.

"We know he has a difficult job ahead of him," said Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, as he ticked off a list of recent blunders at the FBI.

But Leahy said Mueller, a veteran prosecutor credited with turning around the U.S. attorney's office in San Francisco after his appointment there in 1998, is the right man for the job. "I applaud President Bush for his appointment," the senator said.

Leahy's committee gave Mueller a unanimous vote of approval Thursday after two days of hearings earlier in the week that were marked by unstinting praise for Mueller and widespread condemnation of the FBI. Hours after the committee vote, the full Senate approved Mueller for the job on a 98-0 vote.

Mueller soon will undergo surgery for prostate cancer, and no date has been set for his takeover at the FBI, although Justice Department aides indicated it might not happen for several weeks.

Atty. Gen. John Ashcroft, who lobbied hard for the former Marine, said that Mueller "will serve with fidelity, bravery and integrity" and that his background in criminal law brings "an invaluable perspective to the Department of Justice."

Mueller's confirmation followed the Senate's approval earlier this week of Rep. Asa Hutchinson (R-Ark.) as head of the Drug Enforcement Administration and former Senate Sergeant-at-Arms James Ziglar as head of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

But the votes came amid stepped-up political bickering Thursday over some of Bush's other nominations.

Democrats on the Senate Commerce Committee voted down Bush's pick of Mary Sheila Gall as head of the Consumer Product Safety Commission. And a new round of judicial nominations by the White House set off a round of political accusations.

The White House nominated 18 federal judges Thursday, including 15 for seats on district courts and three for the federal claims court.

The selections were concentrated in states that have two Republican senators, with four judges nominated in Oklahoma and three in Kentucky. In states such as California and New York, where both senators are Democrats and the effort to find acceptable candidates may prove more protracted, the White House does not expect to nominate judicial candidates until the fall.

Bush administration officials immediately warned Senate Democrats that they have become frustrated with what they consider unnecessary delays in considering the White House's judicial nominations, which now total 44.

Administration officials complained that, while they have been quick to nominate judges at a rate outpacing those of past presidencies, the Democratic-controlled Senate has approved only four judges so far and has not even scheduled hearings for many candidates. Many districts remain short of judges as a result, Bush advisors said.

"There's really in the administration's view no legitimate justification--given the vacancy crisis--for all these weeks to have passed without hearings," said a senior administration official who asked not to be identified. Bush "expects and is entitled to the same fair treatment for his nominees" as past presidents have received, the official said.

But Leahy said the Judiciary Committee has pushed through the nominations of Mueller and other candidates at a very quick pace, and his aides said the White House has slowed the process by limiting the American Bar Assn.'s traditional role in reviewing nominees.

One of Thursday's judicial nominations who could prove controversial is David Bunning, a 35-year-old assistant U.S. attorney in Kentucky tapped for the federal bench there. Bunning is the son of Sen. Jim Bunning (R-Ky.), and his nomination came a day after Bush nominated Strom

Thurmond Jr., the 28-year-old son of the Senate's senior member, to be the U.S. attorney in South Carolina.

Bunning has been a lawyer for 10 years, two years less than the ABA generally recommends for a lifetime appointment to the federal bench.

Ralph Neas, head of People for the American Way, a liberal public-interest group that has criticized Bush for allegedly trying to pack the courts with "right-wing ideologues," said he wants the Bunning nomination to get a close look.

"Thirty-five years old is very young, and I think it's a legitimate issue to question whether this nominee has the qualifications needed to be a federal judge," he said.

But Bush administration officials said Bunning has a proven record as a prosecutor and is well qualified for the job.

Pitch Made For Approval Of Judicial Nominees

By Tom Brune

Newsday

Friday, August 3, 2001

President George W. Bush is "entitled" to have all of the judicial candidates he has nominated so far confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate by the end of the year, an administration official said yesterday.

The Bush administration official made that claim in announcing 16 new judicial nominations while blasting the Senate Judiciary Committee for failing to act more quickly on judicial candidates Bush has nominated in the past three months.

Administration officials also said they expect to nominate candidates to fill the more than 100 vacancies on the federal bench by the end of the year, which would put a distinctly Republican stamp on the federal judiciary.

Included among yesterday's nominees is the 35-year-old son of Sen. Jim Bunning (R-Ky.) to be a federal judge in Kentucky. On Wednesday, Bush tapped the 29-year-old son of Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) to be U.S. attorney of South Carolina.

Since May, Bush has nominated 44 candidates for the federal bench, and the Senate has confirmed three nominees and appeared likely to confirm a fourth before going on a monthlong recess after today.

An aide to Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) rejected criticism of the pace of the committee's confirmation hearings. "Any fair look at this committee's schedule for the past month shows how brisk it has been," said Leahy spokesman David Carle, noting that it had expedited hearings of the nominees for directors of the FBI and Drug Enforcement Agency.

Carle also refrained from making any promises that all of the Bush judicial nominees would be confirmed by year's end. "It depends on what nominees the president sends," he said.

Bush officials stepped up pressure on Senate Democrats to approve more judicial candidates yesterday after the Senate Commerce Committee, in a separate action, handed Bush his first defeat of a nominee - rejecting his choice for Consumer Product Safety Commission chairman.

"In the past three administrations, there has been a very long-standing bipartisan tradition of [judicial] nominees who were named prior to the August recess being confirmed in the first year of their presidency," said White House spokesman Ari Fleischer.

"Consistent with that bipartisan history, the president hopes and urges that the Senate will move forward and act on all 44 of his [judicial] nominations this year," he said.

Another administration official, speaking on the condition he not be named, however, went further, saying, "We expect and we are entitled to and we would be satisfied if the . . . judges were confirmed."

Most of those nominated yesterday were from states represented by two Republican senators.

Nominated for the First Circuit of Appeals was Jeffrey R. Howard, who came in third in the Republican primary for governor of New Hampshire last year and whose campaign consultant was cited by state officials for improper campaign activities. Howard is a former U.S. attorney and New Hampshire attorney general.

Nominated for the 10th Circuit of Appeals was Terrence L. O'Brien, who after retiring as a Wyoming state court judge won the Republican nomination for a congressional seat as a write-in candidate, but then withdrew before the general election last year.

Nominated for the Eastern District of Kentucky was David Bunning, who since 1991 has been a federal prosecutor.

Meanwhile, Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) used a procedural maneuver to delay the nomination of Deborah Daniels as assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Justice Programs because he said she has not sufficiently answered questions about how she would manage the agency's gun programs. The committee may take up the Daniels nomination in September, when Congress returns from its August recess.

Three Nominees Likely To Win U.S. Judgeships, Lawyers Say Bunning's Son May Face Scrutiny On His Experience

By Tom Loftus

President Bush's three federal judgeship nominees for Kentucky, including the son of U.S. Sen. Jim Bunning, are likely to win Senate confirmation, several prominent Kentucky attorneys said yesterday.

But the experience of David Bunning may get close scrutiny at Senate Judiciary Committee confirmation hearings. The 35-year-old son of the junior senator from Kentucky is a federal prosecutor in Covington.

If confirmed, David Bunning would be the youngest lawyer appointed a federal judge in Kentucky since the American Bar Association began evaluating nominees in 1948. The timetable for confirmation hearings is uncertain.

The other nominees were two Lexington lawyers: Karen Caldwell, 45, a former U.S. attorney who helped oversee the federal investigation of public corruption known as Operation BOPTR0T; and Danny Reeves, 44, who has represented Ashland Oil and the Kentucky High School Athletic Association.

Appointments to federal judgeships are for life and are viewed as prize political plums. Traditionally, presidents closely follow the recommendations of the U.S. senators from their party in making appointments for a particular state.

The elder Bunning and fellow Republican Sen. Mitch McConnell announced the nominations in a statement that did not take note of the relationship between the Bunnings. It described the three as "talented and experienced Kentuckians. . . . We strongly support the president's choices, and are going to do all we can to push their speedy confirmation by the Senate."

Spokesmen for the senators said they had no immediate comment beyond the statement.

The Kentucky Democratic Party criticized Bush for the Bunning nomination.

"By appointing a U.S. senator's son to the federal bench, Bush seems to be polarizing and politicizing a position that should remain completely nonpartisan," party spokeswoman Susan Dixen said.

David Bunning did not return messages left at his office. Caldwell and Reeves said they were honored by the nominations and declined further comment.

One prominent Eastern Kentucky lawyer criticized all three choices.

"Not one of the three nominees is from Eastern Kentucky. These judgeships are for Ashland, Pikeville and London," said Ned Pillersdorf of Prestonsburg.

But Pillersdorf praised Caldwell's work as an attorney and a federal prosecutor. He said he did not know the younger Bunning, and he objected to the nomination of Reeves, with whom he clashed when Reeves represented Ashland Oil in litigation over environmental damage in an Eastern Kentucky oilfield.

The senators' statement described David Bunning as "a dedicated public servant" who as an assistant U.S. attorney has "accumulated significant courtroom litigation experience."

It said the younger Bunning is responsible for a "wide range of criminal litigation and appeals, and in 1998 he successfully prosecuted one of the first Internet fraud and harassment cases in the nation."

ABA guidelines recommend a minimum of 12 years of experience as a lawyer before someone is considered a qualified candidate for the U.S. District Court bench. Bunning has a decade of experience as an attorney.

It's unclear if the difference will pose a difficulty for confirmation.

Mimi Devlin, spokeswoman for Sen. Patrick Leahy, the Vermont Democrat who chairs the Senate Judiciary Committee, said the committee believes experience is important but that lacking some experience would not disqualify Bunning.

"Senator Leahy values the ABA's opinions on these matters, but this is only a guideline," Devlin said.

Joe Savage, a Lexington attorney and former president of the Kentucky Bar Association, said that although experience is important, "I know lawyers who have practiced five years who have gained a lot more experience than some who have practiced 15 years."

Savage, who said he does not know David Bunning, said he expected the experience issue would not be so serious as to block confirmation.

Edward Drennen, president of the Northern Kentucky Bar Association, said he expected Bunning would be conservative on the bench but also open-minded and fair. "He's always demonstrated in our dealings with him a willingness to listen to both sides," said Drennen, a Florence attorney.

He also said it was unfair to attach nepotism to the nomination.

"His father doesn't try these federal cases, David does," Drennen said. "David writes these briefs to the Court of Appeals."

Mark Guilfoyle, a leading Northern Kentucky Democrat, Covington lawyer and former gubernatorial aide, called Bunning an outstanding pick.

Guilfoyle said too much has been made of Bunning's relative lack of experience. "He has lived in federal court for the last 10 years" trying a wide variety of cases, Guilfoyle said.

Although Guilfoyle said he disagrees with the nominee's father on most issues, he described the younger Bunning as a conservative who is in step with the values of most Kentuckians and "in no way, shape or form an ideologue."

Reno Lawyer Hicks Nominated For U.S. Judge Position

By Jane Ann Morrison
Las Vegas Review-Journal
Friday, August 3, 2001

Reno attorney Larry Hicks, a nominee for a federal judgeship under the first President Bush, lost his opportunity when Bush was defeated in the 1992 election. Now Hicks is a nominee again -- this time by the second President Bush. The White House announced the nomination Thursday and forwarded Hicks' name to the U.S. Senate for confirmation as a U.S. District Court judge.

Hicks, 57, was recommended for the lifetime post in May by U.S. Sen. John Ensign, R-Nev. Ensign submitted four names for two judicial vacancies but declined to say how he ranked them. Sources said Hicks and District Judge Jim Mahan were first in line, followed by Las Vegas attorney Walt Cannon and District Judge Mark Gibbons. Hicks' background investigation moved quickly because he already had undergone such a check nine years ago. Mahan's background investigation isn't complete, but one source said he might gain a presidential nomination in September. The two judgeships are based in Las Vegas.

Although federal judgeships are the top patronage appointment any senator makes, Ensign said he didn't base his decision on political cronyism or payback. Ensign said he didn't know Hicks or his other nominees when he selected them, but he used an informal committee of bipartisan advisers to make his choices. He described Hicks as having 'impeccable character' as well as being a distinguished attorney.

Hicks, a sportsman who enjoys duck hunting, was on a previously planned fishing trip in British Columbia but issued a statement saying he 'couldn't be more excited about the opportunity to serve my country' as a federal judge. A partner in the Reno law firm McDonald Carano Wilson McCune Bergin Frankovich & Hicks, he is a trial attorney with extensive courtroom experience, both prosecutor and as a civil attorney.

He started his legal career in 1971 as the chief criminal deputy district attorney in Washoe County, and was elected district attorney of Washoe County in 1973.

In 1979, he began his career as a partner in his current law firm, where he heads the firm's litigation section. For 16 years, he also has worked as a settlement judge for the Nevada Supreme Court. In an interview in May, Hicks said he represented Dow Chemical in a breast implant case, and as district attorney he investigated brothel owner Joe Conforte and his corrupt influence on elected officials in Northern Nevada. His law partner Thomas 'Spike' Wilson, a Democrat, said Hicks is 'known and respected by his peers' and has wide support in the legal community. When FBI officials interviewed Wilson, he said, he guessed they hadn't received any negative comments about Hicks.

'He works hard, he's diligent, detailed, careful, prepared and he knows the law. He considers factual and legal issues carefully,' said Wilson, a former state senator and former chairman of the Nevada Ethics Commission. Wilson predicted Hicks would win confirmation easily. Wilson described Hicks' politics as 'pretty moderate. I don't see him on either extreme. I think he'll be a mainstream judge who follows legal precedent.'

U.S. Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., issued a news release calling Ensign's pick 'a wise choice' and promised to do 'everything in my power as the majority whip' to get Hicks confirmed quickly. The two senators have agreed to share the judicial appointments no matter which party controls the White House, Ensign said.

He will nominate three judges and then give Reid the fourth choice. If the White House goes Democratic in 2004, Reid agreed to do the same with Ensign.

Bush Nominates Four As Judges, U.S. Attorney

By Christ Casteel
The Daily Oklahoman

Five months after receiving recommendations from Oklahoma's senators, the White House on Thursday nominated four people for federal judgeships in the state.

Also nominated was Robert G. McCampbell to be U.S. attorney for the Western District of Oklahoma, based in Oklahoma City.

President Bush sent to the Senate the following nominations:

- Joe L. Heaton, a former Republican leader in the state House of Representatives, to be a judge in the western district. Heaton is an assistant U.S. attorney and spent nine months as the U.S. attorney. He served seven years in the state House and practiced law with Fuller, Tubb & Pomeroy.
- Stephen P. Friot, an Oklahoma City attorney, to fill another vacancy in the western district. He has been in private practice since 1972. He is a partner in the firm of Spradling, Alpern, Friot & Gum. A 1987 book that ranked the top legal guns in the country included Friot among the Oklahomans.
- Claire V. Eagan to be a judge in the northern district, based in Tulsa. She has been a U.S. magistrate judge for three years in the northern district; for 20 years, she was a litigation attorney with Hall, Estill. During her time as magistrate, she has supervised the court's settlement program.

- James H. Payne to be a judge sharing time in the northern district and eastern district, based in Muskogee. Payne has been a U.S. magistrate judge in the eastern district for 12 years. He spent 15 years in private practice, handling civil matters, and also served three years as an assistant U.S. attorney.

- McCampbell to be U.S. attorney. He is a partner with the law firm Crowe and Dunlevy in Oklahoma City. He served as an assistant U.S. attorney in the western district from 1987 to 1994. He is a graduate of Vanderbilt University and Yale Law School.

Oklahoma's senators applauded the nominations, which will be considered first by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

In regard to the judicial nominations, Sen. Jim Inhofe, R-Tulsa, said, "Senator Nickles and I recommended these individuals based on their superb professional experience and sound judicial philosophy. I am confident they will faithfully uphold the Constitution and serve our state and nation well."

Nickles, R-Ponca City, said McCampbell "is an outstanding individual who will serve the state and the country well."

Bush Is Ahead of Clinton Pace on Nominees

The New York Times

After half a year in office, President Bush has 52 nominees for executive branch positions awaiting Senate confirmation and 211 positions in his administration yet to be named, according to a running count by the Brookings Institution.

With Congress and the White House on vacation for a month, Brookings, a research group, projects that some appointees will not be in place until after Mr. Bush has been in office for a year.

Even March 2002 would be optimistic, said Paul C. Light, vice president and director of governmental studies at Brookings. "At this point, people in the administration are going to be arriving as others in it are departing," Mr. Light said.

The White House puts a somewhat better face on the facts. "I think it's fair to say that even given the shortened transition that this administration has worked from, the personnel and the nomination process have worked exceedingly well from the White House end of Pennsylvania Avenue," said Ari Fleischer, the White House spokesman.

Mr. Fleischer said on Friday that Mr. Bush had nominated 443 people for Senate confirmation, counting not only the nominees for 360 cabinet and subcabinet posts, but also judges, top military officers and ambassadors, whom Brookings does not count in its survey. Brookings says the White House has made nominations for 321 out of 499 positions; 227 of the nominees have been confirmed. Only Mary Sheila Gall, the appointee for the Consumer Product Safety Commission, has been rejected. Since the Democrats took control of the Senate about six weeks ago, 128 nominees have been confirmed. In the Republican-controlled Senate, 99 were confirmed. On Friday the Senate confirmed 38 nominees before adjourning until September.

Compared with two previous presidents who took over the White House from the other party, Bill Clinton and Ronald Reagan, Mr. Bush is ahead of Mr. Clinton's pace but behind Mr. Reagan by 43 confirmations, according to Brookings.

In recent weeks, the new majority leader, Senator Tom Daschle of South Dakota, after meeting with Republican leaders and senior senators, has bypassed hearings for lower-level nominees, sending them directly to the floor for confirmation.

Senate Says Vacation More Important Than Judicial Vacancies According To People For Common Sense Courts

With one of every eight federal judgeships vacant and 40 judicial nominations pending, the United States Senate today took bold action -- and began a month-long vacation.

"Senate leaders showed their true colors today," said Oklahoma Gov. Frank A. Keating, national chairman of People for Common Sense Courts. "By abandoning Washington for a month, they abandoned any hope of resolving the growing judicial crisis any time soon. Obviously, their vacation is more important to them than maintaining a functioning legal system."

There are now 108 vacancies on the federal district and appeals courts, including 39 designated as emergencies because of the enormous number of cases pending. President Bush has nominated 44 individuals to fill these posts; the Senate has confirmed 4. "If the Oklahoma state courts were in this type of crisis and my response was to take a month-long vacation, the voters and the news media would never let me hear the end of it," Keating said.

"In the first years of the past three Administrations, all but one of the judges nominated before the Senate's August recess were confirmed that year," said Andrew R. Stephens, president of People for Common Sense Courts. "That looks increasingly unlikely this year. The Senate is scheduled to be in session for only another 22 days, and it has 40 nominations pending."

"When Democrats controlled the White House and Republicans controlled the Senate, Senate Democrats complained that 67 judicial vacancies was too many," Stephens noted. "Now that party control has changed, their response to 108 vacancies is to drag their feet." During the transition this spring from Republican to Democratic control of the Senate, incoming Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) refused to schedule any judicial confirmation hearings -- even though other Senate committees were holding confirmation hearings.

Before the Senate returns from its August recess, at least one more federal appeals court judge is scheduled to retire -- from the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals, already suffering an emergency because of 6 vacancies. Another four federal judges have announced plans to retire by the end of the year -- in addition to any unexpected retirements, resignations, or deaths.

With the American Bar Association meeting in Chicago today, it is an apt moment to look at the ABA's controversial judicial-evaluation process and consider whether it provides an objective, nonpartisan measure of a judicial nominee's qualifications.

That's what it says it does, a claim echoed by the Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee, who vow not to schedule a nominee's hearing until they have reviewed the ABA's rating. This faith persists despite the White House's decision not to call upon the ABA to pre-screen its judicial nominees, a system that had been used by presidents since the 1950s.

What does the evidence show? I've just completed a statistical study of the ABA's ratings of appointees to the U.S. Courts of Appeals during the Clinton and first Bush administrations and can report that the facts don't support the ABA's claim of objectivity. The ABA may once have been objective, but it's not anymore.

I analyzed the credentials of the 108 nominees who were ultimately appointed to the federal appeals courts during the Clinton and Bush-1 administrations. The results? The ABA applied measurably different and harsher standards during President George H. W. Bush's administration than it applied during President Bill Clinton's tenure. In short, the Bush appointees got lower ABA ratings than the Clinton appointees.

First a word on how the process works. The ABA's 15-member Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary rates judges as "Well Qualified," "Qualified" or "Not Qualified."

Judicial temperament and integrity, two criteria that the ABA considers, are hard to measure. But many credentials can be measured empirically. My study considered six: judicial experience, an elite law school education, law review, a federal court clerkship, private-practice experience, and government-practice experience. The data on the professional qualifications of the 108 judges were collected by the Federalist Society from publicly available sources or directly from the judges. While my study found strong evidence of different treatment of nominees, this isn't a simple story of ABA bias in favor of Clinton nominees. Among nominees with the most important credential -- prior judicial experience -- Clinton and Bush-1 nominees both fared roughly equally.

Instead, the problem arose for nominees without prior judicial experience. Because these candidates lacked the most obvious credential for the job, the ABA evaluations could be more subjective. Here Clinton nominees fared strikingly better than Bush-1 nominees. Some 65% of Clinton appointees without judicial experience were unanimously rated "Well Qualified" compared with only 17% of the Bush-1 appointees. Controlling for credentials, my study found that Clinton nominees had more than 10 times better odds of getting the ABA's highest rating than similarly credentialed Bush appointees. In short, being nominated by Bill Clinton was a stronger positive variable than any other credential or than all other credentials put together.

A Clinton nominee with few of the six credentials I measured had a much better chance of getting the highest ABA rating than a Bush nominee with most of these credentials. For

Rebuffed By White House, ABA Finds It Still Has Role In Judicial Nominations Before Democratic-led Senate

By Anne Gearan

The Associated Press

Saturday, August 4, 2001

Three months into George W. Bush's presidency, the White House fired the American Bar Association from its job doing secret background checks on potential federal judges.

Losing that prestigious role after 50 years left many in the organization of 400,000 lawyers smarting and convinced still that the White House made a rash and largely political decision.

But lawyers gathered for the group's annual meeting said that for now, surprisingly little has changed.

The ABA continues to vet judges, and the newly Democratic-controlled Senate still relies on the ABA's recommendations. The difference is that the ABA does its work after the White House announces the name of a potential judge, instead of beforehand.

"The dynamic has changed, but we're still doing our work," said Bob Hirshon, who will become the ABA president during the six-day meeting.

Actually, the dynamic changed twice: in March when the White House gave the ABA the boot and then in May, when Vermont Sen. James Jeffords' defection from the Republicans gave Democrats control of the Senate.

In one sense, the Senate switch meant the ABA role was just as influential as before, Senate aides said. Democrats had said they would not confirm any Bush judge without an ABA rating, and after the switch they had the muscle to make the warning stick.

example: A nominee with an elite law school education, law review, a federal clerkship, and experience in both government and private practice would have only a 32% chance of getting the highest ABA rating if he were a Bush appointee, but a 77% chance if he were a Clinton appointee. A Clinton nominee with none or just one of these five credentials would still have at least a 45% chance of getting the highest rating.

The differences in how the ABA treated Bush-1 and Clinton nominees reached even to the internal decision making of the ABA committee. The ratings committee split its vote between two ratings 33% of the time when evaluating Bush-1 appointees, but it split only 17% of the time when evaluating Clinton appointees.

If Clinton nominees had been subjected to the same credentials-driven approach as Bush-1 candidates, only 46% of Clinton's confirmed nominees would have been unanimously rated as "Well Qualified." Instead, 62% actually received that top rating. On average Bush-1 and Clinton nominees had almost identically strong measured qualifications, yet they were not rated similarly.

The data suggest that when Bill Clinton took office, the ABA softened its standards, possibly emphasizing credentials such as temperament and philosophy that are harder to measure than experience and educational success. Now the ABA is back to rating Republican nominees -- and apparently is also back to its old harsh ways. The ABA ratings of George W. Bush's first 11 appellate nominees were released this summer. While it is much too soon to reach any firm conclusions about Bush-2, the pattern so far is not encouraging.

Although 62% of Clinton's 66 confirmed appellate nominees got the ABA's highest rating of unanimously "Well Qualified," only five of the first 11 new Bush nominees -- 45% -- have received the highest ABA rating, the same percentage that confirmed nominees received under the administration of the elder Bush.

At the end of the day, one nagging question remains: Why hasn't the ABA itself noticed the large political differences in its evaluative processes and worked harder to understand, explain or eliminate them? Now that there are hard data that support the claims of its critics, it would be good to see fewer denials and more introspection and reform.

You go ahead, and then we'll come back over here.

Q Okay. Can you talk about the upcoming fight over judicial nominations in the fall and what strategy you guys are going to use to get those through the Senate?

SEN. NICKLES: Well, let me just make a couple of comments. One, the leader gave me a little responsibility on trying to help shepherd some of the nominees through. And I will compliment Senator Reid and Senator Daschle; they have been cooperative. We've encouraged them to let's work together, see if we can't get some through. In the last couple of three weeks we've had some pretty good progress, and we want to continue that. It's not fair for this administration -- they're already --

Q But I'm talking specifically about judicial nominations.

SEN. NICKLES: I understand. I understand. It's not fair for this administration, they still have assistant secretaries that haven't been confirmed, and Cabinet secretaries are entitled to have their nominees confirmed.

Judges. The administration has just now sent -- they sent up the Circuit Court judges and they haven't been considered totally through the Judiciary Committee. Hopefully they will be. The administration is right now in the process of sending District Court judges through, and we're encouraging them to hurry up and get those, and they've been held up because of the FBI background checks and so on. But we hope and expect that the Judiciary Committee will work with all senators to get these judges in. We've got a lot of judges that are waiting, a lot of U.S. Attorneys, a lot of Marshals that have not been confirmed, that need to be confirmed. They should have been confirmed, frankly, in many cases by now, but we haven't got the nominations yet from the administration. So I'm not just faulting the Judiciary Committee, except for some of the Circuit Courts, they've been kind of slow on Circuit Court.

SEN. LOTT: Let me just give you some numbers, and be honest. First of all, I think that we should have had the U.S. Attorneys and U.S. Marshal nominees already pending before the Senate. They're not here, so you can't be critical of the Democrats for not moving that.

With regard to judges, I believe it's right that there have only been four federal marshals confirmed --

SEN. NICKLES: Judges.

SEN. LOTT: -- federal judges confirmed by the Senate.

SEN. NICKLES: Five.

SEN. LOTT: Did we do two yesterday?

SEN. NICKLES: Five. We did two yesterday.

SEN. LOTT: Okay, five. And we still have pending in the Judiciary Committee 26 maybe?

SEN. NICKLES: Twenty-something. Yeah.

SEN. LOTT: And several of them, about 10 or so, have been here since I believe May.

SEN. NICKLES: April, May, yeah.

SEN. LOTT: I mean, so there could have been hearings. And I don't believe they've even had hearings on most of them.

Now, the administration I believe will be sending a block of probably 50 or 60 nominations here momentarily, in the next few days, and those will be pending. So we really need to start moving aggressively on having hearings and reporting out judicial nominees, both judges and U.S. attorneys when we come back in September.

SEN. NICKLES: And the great majority of these will not even be controversial.

SEN. LOTT: That's right.

SEN. NICKLES: The great majority of these will be supported by both senator from their home states, and we expect those can go through pretty quickly.

Q Senator Lott.

Q Senator Lott, you know, last week, President Bush has backed the sons of Senator Jim Bunning and also the son of Strom Thurmond for judicial nominations for judgeships. Is he trying to win influence with the Senate through appointing people's relatives?

SEN. LOTT: I can't believe a president would be trying to win influence with the Senate! Every president does that. But also, he is prepared to select good men and women for federal positions, even if they are the sons and daughters of senators or judges for that matter. I know Strom Thurmond Jr. This is a 28-year-old, extremely sharp, very intelligent young lawyers with prosecutory (sic) experience. I'd pick him. And there are others. You know, Justice Rehnquist's daughter has been selected for a position in the administration. She is, from all accounts, a brilliant person who will do an excellent job. I don't think that ought to guarantee you'll be nominated or confirmed, but neither should it be prohibitive.

"It has been the committee's practice to (rely) on ABA ratings, and that has not changed," said David Carle, spokesman for Judiciary Chairman Sen. Patrick Leahy, a Democrat.

"There would have been a change if the Republicans were still in control. At least some Republicans were apparently willing to proceed without ABA ratings," Carle said.

In another sense, the ABA's role is fundamentally different. Before, most presidents quietly killed a nomination if the ABA found the candidate unqualified, and the name never became public.

That gave the ABA unparalleled veto power over White House decisions, said Leonard Leo, a vice president of the conservative Federalist Society.

Conservatives long have viewed the ABA with suspicion. Congressional Republicans, in particular, tend to perceive the organization as liberal-leaning, and blame a mixed ABA review of Robert Bork for defeat of the conservative nominated for the Supreme Court.

The ABA rejects the liberal label. The organization's leaders say there is a high wall between policy positions and its work evaluating judges. The ABA has lobbied for abortion rights and gun control.

"The decision by the White House cast a lot of light on the process, and caused people to think about the ABA's role," Leo said. "I think the jury is still out as to whether the role they play is valuable or not."

Many Federalist Society members are now advising Bush on judicial nominees, and several of its members were among Bush's initial crop of judicial picks.

The society's skeptical review of ABA activities, called "ABA Watch," this month includes a comparison of ABA ratings for Clinton administration appeals court nominees and those nominated by the first President George Bush.

The Federalist Society study found that when it came to nominees with similar legal experience, the Clinton choices were at least seven times more likely to win the highest "well-qualified" ABA rating.

Northwestern University law professor James Lindgren, who did the analysis, also looked at some of the first nominees from the current Bush administration, Leo said.

"We are seeing some of the same patterns, although the patterns are not as stark," Leo said.

The ABA has finished its investigations of 17 of Bush's first 44 nominees for federal trial and appeals courts, and has taken about the same time to prepare the reports as it did before, ABA leaders and Senate aides said.

So far, the ABA has rated each candidate "qualified" or "well-qualified."

"We may not know the answer to this question for awhile _ whether the information we receive when a name is in the public domain is the same versus the information we received the last 50 years," the ABA's Hirshon said.

The ABA maintains that so long as the potential nominee's name was not yet public, friends or co-workers can speak without risk of retribution and without publicly sully a nominee's reputation.

Although she was blindsided by the White House decision in March, current ABA president Martha Barnett now sounds sanguine about the change.

"This is one of those issues that created angst in the beginning, but has now worked out well and is a non-issue," she said.

United Senate Confirms Mueller To Head FBI; Selection: Unanimous Vote Cements Bush's Nomination. Bickering Over Nominees For Other Posts Gets Worse

Despite partisan wrangling over a new batch of White House nominations, the Senate on Thursday gave quick and unanimous approval to one of President Bush's most closely watched picks as it confirmed San Francisco prosecutor Robert S. Mueller to lead the besieged FBI.

Mueller, 56, will take over an agency that has seen its reputation as the nation's premier law enforcement agency badly tarnished by recent episodes of espionage, witness intimidation, lost documents, missing weapons and other embarrassments within its ranks.

"We know he has a difficult job ahead of him," said Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, as he ticked off a list of recent blunders at the FBI.

But Leahy said Mueller, a veteran prosecutor credited with turning around the U.S. attorney's office in San Francisco after his appointment there in 1998, is the right man for the job. "I applaud President Bush for his appointment," the senator said.

Leahy's committee gave Mueller a unanimous vote of approval Thursday after two days of hearings earlier in the week that were marked by unstinting praise for Mueller and widespread condemnation of the FBI. Hours after the committee vote, the full Senate approved Mueller for the job on a 98-0 vote.

Mueller soon will undergo surgery for prostate cancer, and no date has been set for his takeover at the FBI, although Justice Department aides indicated it might not happen for several weeks.

Atty. Gen. John Ashcroft, who lobbied hard for the former Marine, said that Mueller "will serve with fidelity, bravery and integrity" and that his background in criminal law brings "an invaluable perspective to the Department of Justice."

Mueller's confirmation followed the Senate's approval earlier this week of Rep. Asa Hutchinson (R-Ark.) as head of the Drug Enforcement Administration and former Senate Sergeant-at-Arms James Ziglar as head of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

But the votes came amid stepped-up political bickering Thursday over some of Bush's other nominations.

Democrats on the Senate Commerce Committee voted down Bush's pick of Mary Sheila Gall as head of the Consumer Product Safety Commission. And a new round of judicial nominations by the White House set off a round of political accusations.

The White House nominated 18 federal judges Thursday, including 15 for seats on district courts and three for the federal claims court.

The selections were concentrated in states that have two Republican senators, with four judges nominated in Oklahoma and three in Kentucky. In states such as California and New York, where both senators are Democrats and the effort to find acceptable candidates may prove more protracted, the White House does not expect to nominate judicial candidates until the fall.

Bush administration officials immediately warned Senate Democrats that they have become frustrated with what they consider unnecessary delays in considering the White House's judicial nominations, which now total 44.

Administration officials complained that, while they have been quick to nominate judges at a rate outpacing those of past presidencies, the Democratic-controlled Senate has approved only four judges so far and has not even scheduled hearings for many candidates. Many districts remain short of judges as a result, Bush advisors said.

"There's really in the administration's view no legitimate justification--given the vacancy crisis--for all these weeks to have passed without hearings," said a senior administration official who asked not to be identified. Bush "expects and is entitled to the same fair treatment for his nominees" as past presidents have received, the official said.

But Leahy said the Judiciary Committee has pushed through the nominations of Mueller and other candidates at a very quick pace, and his aides said the White House has slowed the process by limiting the American Bar Assn.'s traditional role in reviewing nominees.

One of Thursday's judicial nominations who could prove controversial is David Bunning, a 35-year-old assistant U.S. attorney in Kentucky tapped for the federal bench there. Bunning is the son of Sen. Jim Bunning (R-Ky.), and his nomination came a day after Bush nominated Strom

Thurmond Jr., the 28-year-old son of the Senate's senior member, to be the U.S. attorney in South Carolina.

Bunning has been a lawyer for 10 years, two years less than the ABA generally recommends for a lifetime appointment to the federal bench.

Ralph Neas, head of People for the American Way, a liberal public-interest group that has criticized Bush for allegedly trying to pack the courts with "right-wing ideologues," said he wants the Bunning nomination to get a close look.

"Thirty-five years old is very young, and I think it's a legitimate issue to question whether this nominee has the qualifications needed to be a federal judge," he said.

But Bush administration officials said Bunning has a proven record as a prosecutor and is well qualified for the job.

Pitch Made For Approval Of Judicial Nominees

By Tom Brune

Newsday

Friday, August 3, 2001

President George W. Bush is "entitled" to have all of the judicial candidates he has nominated so far confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate by the end of the year, an administration official said yesterday.

The Bush administration official made that claim in announcing 16 new judicial nominations while blasting the Senate Judiciary Committee for failing to act more quickly on judicial candidates Bush has nominated in the past three months.

Administration officials also said they expect to nominate candidates to fill the more than 100 vacancies on the federal bench by the end of the year, which would put a distinctly Republican stamp on the federal judiciary.

Included among yesterday's nominees is the 35-year-old son of Sen. Jim Bunning (R-Ky.) to be a federal judge in Kentucky. On Wednesday, Bush tapped the 29-year-old son of Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) to be U.S. attorney of South Carolina.

Since May, Bush has nominated 44 candidates for the federal bench, and the Senate has confirmed three nominees and appeared likely to confirm a fourth before going on a monthlong recess after today.

An aide to Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) rejected criticism of the pace of the committee's confirmation hearings. "Any fair look at this committee's schedule for the past month shows how brisk it has been," said Leahy spokesman David Carle, noting that it had expedited hearings of the nominees for directors of the FBI and Drug Enforcement Agency.

Carle also refrained from making any promises that all of the Bush judicial nominees would be confirmed by year's end. "It depends on what nominees the president sends," he said.

Bush officials stepped up pressure on Senate Democrats to approve more judicial candidates yesterday after the Senate Commerce Committee, in a separate action, handed Bush his first defeat of a nominee - rejecting his choice for Consumer Product Safety Commission chairman.

"In the past three administrations, there has been a very long-standing bipartisan tradition of [judicial] nominees who were named prior to the August recess being confirmed in the first year of their presidency," said White House spokesman Ari Fleischer.

"Consistent with that bipartisan history, the president hopes and urges that the Senate will move forward and act on all 44 of his [judicial] nominations this year," he said.

Another administration official, speaking on the condition he not be named, however, went further, saying, "We expect and we are entitled to and we would be satisfied if the . . . judges were confirmed."

Most of those nominated yesterday were from states represented by two Republican senators.

Nominated for the First Circuit of Appeals was Jeffrey R. Howard, who came in third in the Republican primary for governor of New Hampshire last year and whose campaign consultant was cited by state officials for improper campaign activities. Howard is a former U.S. attorney and New Hampshire attorney general.

Nominated for the 10th Circuit of Appeals was Terrence L. O'Brien, who after retiring as a Wyoming state court judge won the Republican nomination for a congressional seat as a write-in candidate, but then withdrew before the general election last year.

Nominated for the Eastern District of Kentucky was David Bunning, who since 1991 has been a federal prosecutor.

Meanwhile, Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) used a procedural maneuver to delay the nomination of Deborah Daniels as assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Justice Programs because he said she has not sufficiently answered questions about how she would manage the agency's gun programs. The committee may take up the Daniels nomination in September, when Congress returns from its August recess.

Three Nominees Likely To Win U.S. Judgeships, Lawyers Say Bunning's Son May Face Scrutiny On His Experience

President Bush's three federal judgeship nominees for Kentucky, including the son of U.S. Sen. Jim Bunning, are likely to win Senate confirmation, several prominent Kentucky attorneys said yesterday.

But the experience of David Bunning may get close scrutiny at Senate Judiciary Committee confirmation hearings. The 35-year-old son of the junior senator from Kentucky is a federal prosecutor in Covington.

If confirmed, David Bunning would be the youngest lawyer appointed a federal judge in Kentucky since the American Bar Association began evaluating nominees in 1948. The timetable for confirmation hearings is uncertain.

The other nominees were two Lexington lawyers: Karen Caldwell, 45, a former U.S. attorney who helped oversee the federal investigation of public corruption known as Operation BOPTR0T; and Danny Reeves, 44, who has represented Ashland Oil and the Kentucky High School Athletic Association.

Appointments to federal judgeships are for life and are viewed as prize political plums. Traditionally, presidents closely follow the recommendations of the U.S. senators from their party in making appointments for a particular state.

The elder Bunning and fellow Republican Sen. Mitch McConnell announced the nominations in a statement that did not take note of the relationship between the Bunnings. It described the three as "talented and experienced Kentuckians. . . . We strongly support the president's choices, and are going to do all we can to push their speedy confirmation by the Senate."

Spokesmen for the senators said they had no immediate comment beyond the statement.

The Kentucky Democratic Party criticized Bush for the Bunning nomination.

"By appointing a U.S. senator's son to the federal bench, Bush seems to be polarizing and politicizing a position that should remain completely nonpartisan," party spokeswoman Susan Dixen said.

David Bunning did not return messages left at his office. Caldwell and Reeves said they were honored by the nominations and declined further comment.

One prominent Eastern Kentucky lawyer criticized all three choices.

"Not one of the three nominees is from Eastern Kentucky. These judgeships are for Ashland, Pikeville and London," said Ned Pillersdorf of Prestonsburg.

But Pillersdorf praised Caldwell's work as an attorney and a federal prosecutor. He said he did not know the younger Bunning, and he objected to the nomination of Reeves, with whom he clashed when Reeves represented Ashland Oil in litigation over environmental damage in an Eastern Kentucky oilfield.

The senators' statement described David Bunning as "a dedicated public servant" who as an assistant U.S. attorney has "accumulated significant courtroom litigation experience."

It said the younger Bunning is responsible for a "wide range of criminal litigation and appeals, and in 1998 he successfully prosecuted one of the first Internet fraud and harassment cases in the nation."

ABA guidelines recommend a minimum of 12 years of experience as a lawyer before someone is considered a qualified candidate for the U.S. District Court bench. Bunning has a decade of experience as an attorney.

It's unclear if the difference will pose a difficulty for confirmation.

Mimi Devlin, spokeswoman for Sen. Patrick Leahy, the Vermont Democrat who chairs the Senate Judiciary Committee, said the committee believes experience is important but that lacking some experience would not disqualify Bunning.

"Senator Leahy values the ABA's opinions on these matters, but this is only a guideline," Devlin said.

Joe Savage, a Lexington attorney and former president of the Kentucky Bar Association, said that although experience is important, "I know lawyers who have practiced five years who have gained a lot more experience than some who have practiced 15 years."

Savage, who said he does not know David Bunning, said he expected the experience issue would not be so serious as to block confirmation.

Edward Drennen, president of the Northern Kentucky Bar Association, said he expected Bunning would be conservative on the bench but also open-minded and fair. "He's always demonstrated in our dealings with him a willingness to listen to both sides," said Drennen, a Florence attorney.

He also said it was unfair to attach nepotism to the nomination.

"His father doesn't try these federal cases, David does," Drennen said. "David writes these briefs to the Court of Appeals."

Mark Guilfoyle, a leading Northern Kentucky Democrat, Covington lawyer and former gubernatorial aide, called Bunning an outstanding pick.

Guilfoyle said too much has been made of Bunning's relative lack of experience. "He has lived in federal court for the last 10 years" trying a wide variety of cases, Guilfoyle said.

Although Guilfoyle said he disagrees with the nominee's father on most issues, he described the younger Bunning as a conservative who is in step with the values of most Kentuckians and "in no way, shape or form an ideologue."

Reno Lawyer Hicks Nominated For U.S. Judge Position

By Jane Ann Morrison
Las Vegas Review-Journal
Friday, August 3, 2001

Reno attorney Larry Hicks, a nominee for a federal judgeship under the first President Bush, lost his opportunity when Bush was defeated in the 1992 election. Now Hicks is a nominee again -- this time by the second President Bush. The White House announced the nomination Thursday and forwarded Hicks' name to the U.S. Senate for confirmation as a U.S. District Court judge.

Hicks, 57, was recommended for the lifetime post in May by U.S. Sen. John Ensign, R-Nev. Ensign submitted four names for two judicial vacancies but declined to say how he ranked them. Sources said Hicks and District Judge Jim Mahan were first in line, followed by Las Vegas attorney Walt Cannon and District Judge Mark Gibbons. Hicks' background investigation moved quickly because he already had undergone such a check nine years ago. Mahan's background investigation isn't complete, but one source said he might gain a presidential nomination in September. The two judgeships are based in Las Vegas.

Although federal judgeships are the top patronage appointment any senator makes, Ensign said he didn't base his decision on political cronyism or payback. Ensign said he didn't know Hicks or his other nominees when he selected them, but he used an informal committee of bipartisan advisers to make his choices. He described Hicks as having 'impeccable character' as well as being a distinguished attorney.

Hicks, a sportsman who enjoys duck hunting, was on a previously planned fishing trip in British Columbia but issued a statement saying he 'couldn't be more excited about the opportunity to serve my country' as a federal judge. A partner in the Reno law firm McDonald Carano Wilson McCune Bergin Frankovich & Hicks, he is a trial attorney with extensive courtroom experience, both prosecutor and as a civil attorney.

He started his legal career in 1971 as the chief criminal deputy district attorney in Washoe County, and was elected district attorney of Washoe County in 1973.

In 1979, he began his career as a partner in his current law firm, where he heads the firm's litigation section. For 16 years, he also has worked as a settlement judge for the Nevada Supreme Court. In an interview in May, Hicks said he represented Dow Chemical in a breast implant case, and as district attorney he investigated brothel owner Joe Conforte and his corrupt influence on elected officials in Northern Nevada. His law partner Thomas 'Spike' Wilson, a Democrat, said Hicks is 'known and respected by his peers' and has wide support in the legal community. When FBI officials interviewed Wilson, he said, he guessed they hadn't received any negative comments about Hicks.

'He works hard, he's diligent, detailed, careful, prepared and he knows the law. He considers factual and legal issues carefully,' said Wilson, a former state senator and former chairman of the Nevada Ethics Commission. Wilson predicted Hicks would win confirmation easily. Wilson described Hicks' politics as 'pretty moderate. I don't see him on either extreme. I think he'll be a mainstream judge who follows legal precedent.'

U.S. Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., issued a news release calling Ensign's pick 'a wise choice' and promised to do 'everything in my power as the majority whip' to get Hicks confirmed quickly. The two senators have agreed to share the judicial appointments no matter which party controls the White House, Ensign said.

He will nominate three judges and then give Reid the fourth choice. If the White House goes Democratic in 2004, Reid agreed to do the same with Ensign.

Bush Nominates Four As Judges, U.S. Attorney

By Christ Casteel
The Daily Oklahoman

Five months after receiving recommendations from Oklahoma's senators, the White House on Thursday nominated four people for federal judgeships in the state.

Also nominated was Robert G. McCampbell to be U.S. attorney for the Western District of Oklahoma, based in Oklahoma City.

President Bush sent to the Senate the following nominations:

- Joe L. Heaton, a former Republican leader in the state House of Representatives, to be a judge in the western district. Heaton is an assistant U.S. attorney and spent nine months as the U.S. attorney. He served seven years in the state House and practiced law with Fuller, Tubb & Pomeroy.
- Stephen P. Friot, an Oklahoma City attorney, to fill another vacancy in the western district. He has been in private practice since 1972. He is a partner in the firm of Spradling, Alpern, Friot & Gum. A 1987 book that ranked the top legal guns in the country included Friot among the Oklahomans.
- Claire V. Eagan to be a judge in the northern district, based in Tulsa. She has been a U.S. magistrate judge for three years in the northern district; for 20 years, she was a litigation attorney with Hall, Estill. During her time as magistrate, she has supervised the court's settlement program.

- James H. Payne to be a judge sharing time in the northern district and eastern district, based in Muskogee. Payne has been a U.S. magistrate judge in the eastern district for 12 years. He spent 15 years in private practice, handling civil matters, and also served three years as an assistant U.S. attorney.

- McCampbell to be U.S. attorney. He is a partner with the law firm Crowe and Dunlevy in Oklahoma City. He served as an assistant U.S. attorney in the western district from 1987 to 1994. He is a graduate of Vanderbilt University and Yale Law School.

Oklahoma's senators applauded the nominations, which will be considered first by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

In regard to the judicial nominations, Sen. Jim Inhofe, R-Tulsa, said, "Senator Nickles and I recommended these individuals based on their superb professional experience and sound judicial philosophy. I am confident they will faithfully uphold the Constitution and serve our state and nation well."

Nickles, R-Ponca City, said McCampbell "is an outstanding individual who will serve the state and the country well."

Bush Is Ahead of Clinton Pace on Nominees

The New York Times

Monday, August 6, 2001

After half a year in office, President Bush has 52 nominees for executive branch positions awaiting Senate confirmation and 211 positions in his administration yet to be named, according to a running count by the Brookings Institution.

With Congress and the White House on vacation for a month, Brookings, a research group, projects that some appointees will not be in place until after Mr. Bush has been in office for a year.

Even March 2002 would be optimistic, said Paul C. Light, vice president and director of governmental studies at Brookings. "At this point, people in the administration are going to be arriving as others in it are departing," Mr. Light said.

The White House puts a somewhat better face on the facts. "I think it's fair to say that even given the shortened transition that this administration has worked from, the personnel and the nomination process have worked exceedingly well from the White House end of Pennsylvania Avenue," said Ari Fleischer, the White House spokesman.

Mr. Fleischer said on Friday that Mr. Bush had nominated 443 people for Senate confirmation, counting not only the nominees for 360 cabinet and subcabinet posts, but also judges, top military officers and ambassadors, whom Brookings does not count in its survey. Brookings says the White House has made nominations for 321 out of 499 positions; 227 of the nominees have been confirmed. Only Mary Sheila Gall, the appointee for the Consumer Product Safety Commission, has been rejected. Since the Democrats took control of the Senate about six weeks ago, 128 nominees have been confirmed. In the Republican-controlled Senate, 99 were confirmed. On Friday the Senate confirmed 38 nominees before adjourning until September.

Compared with two previous presidents who took over the White House from the other party, Bill Clinton and Ronald Reagan, Mr. Bush is ahead of Mr. Clinton's pace but behind Mr. Reagan by 43 confirmations, according to Brookings.

In recent weeks, the new majority leader, Senator Tom Daschle of South Dakota, after meeting with Republican leaders and senior senators, has bypassed hearings for lower-level nominees, sending them directly to the floor for confirmation.

Senate Says Vacation More Important Than Judicial Vacancies According To People For Common Sense Courts

With one of every eight federal judgeships vacant and 40 judicial nominations pending, the United States Senate today took bold action -- and began a month-long vacation.

"Senate leaders showed their true colors today," said Oklahoma Gov. Frank A. Keating, national chairman of People for Common Sense Courts. "By abandoning Washington for a month, they abandoned any hope of resolving the growing judicial crisis any time soon. Obviously, their vacation is more important to them than maintaining a functioning legal system."

There are now 108 vacancies on the federal district and appeals courts, including 39 designated as emergencies because of the enormous number of cases pending. President Bush has nominated 44 individuals to fill these posts; the Senate has confirmed 4. "If the Oklahoma state courts were in this type of crisis and my response was to take a month-long vacation, the voters and the news media would never let me hear the end of it," Keating said.

"In the first years of the past three Administrations, all but one of the judges nominated before the Senate's August recess were confirmed that year," said Andrew R. Stephens, president of People for Common Sense Courts. "That looks increasingly unlikely this year. The Senate is scheduled to be in session for only another 22 days, and it has 40 nominations pending."

"When Democrats controlled the White House and Republicans controlled the Senate, Senate Democrats complained that 67 judicial vacancies was too many," Stephens noted. "Now that party control has changed, their response to 108 vacancies is to drag their feet." During the transition this spring from Republican to Democratic control of the Senate, incoming Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) refused to schedule any judicial confirmation hearings -- even though other Senate committees were holding confirmation hearings.

Before the Senate returns from its August recess, at least one more federal appeals court judge is scheduled to retire -- from the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals, already suffering an emergency because of 6 vacancies. Another four federal judges have announced plans to retire by the end of the year -- in addition to any unexpected retirements, resignations, or deaths.

With the American Bar Association meeting in Chicago today, it is an apt moment to look at the ABA's controversial judicial-evaluation process and consider whether it provides an objective, nonpartisan measure of a judicial nominee's qualifications.

That's what it says it does, a claim echoed by the Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee, who vow not to schedule a nominee's hearing until they have reviewed the ABA's rating. This faith persists despite the White House's decision not to call upon the ABA to pre-screen its judicial nominees, a system that had been used by presidents since the 1950s.

What does the evidence show? I've just completed a statistical study of the ABA's ratings of appointees to the U.S. Courts of Appeals during the Clinton and first Bush administrations and can report that the facts don't support the ABA's claim of objectivity. The ABA may once have been objective, but it's not anymore.

I analyzed the credentials of the 108 nominees who were ultimately appointed to the federal appeals courts during the Clinton and Bush-1 administrations. The results? The ABA applied measurably different and harsher standards during President George H. W. Bush's administration than it applied during President Bill Clinton's tenure. In short, the Bush appointees got lower ABA ratings than the Clinton appointees.

First a word on how the process works. The ABA's 15-member Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary rates judges as "Well Qualified," "Qualified" or "Not Qualified."

Judicial temperament and integrity, two criteria that the ABA considers, are hard to measure. But many credentials can be measured empirically. My study considered six: judicial experience, an elite law school education, law review, a federal court clerkship, private-practice experience, and government-practice experience. The data on the professional qualifications of the 108 judges were collected by the Federalist Society from publicly available sources or directly from the judges. While my study found strong evidence of different treatment of nominees, this isn't a simple story of ABA bias in favor of Clinton nominees. Among nominees with the most important credential -- prior judicial experience -- Clinton and Bush-1 nominees both fared roughly equally.

Instead, the problem arose for nominees without prior judicial experience. Because these candidates lacked the most obvious credential for the job, the ABA evaluations could be more subjective. Here Clinton nominees fared strikingly better than Bush-1 nominees. Some 65% of Clinton appointees without judicial experience were unanimously rated "Well Qualified" compared with only 17% of the Bush-1 appointees. Controlling for credentials, my study found that Clinton nominees had more than 10 times better odds of getting the ABA's highest rating than similarly credentialed Bush appointees. In short, being nominated by Bill Clinton was a stronger positive variable than any other credential or than all other credentials put together.

A Clinton nominee with few of the six credentials I measured had a much better chance of getting the highest ABA rating than a Bush nominee with most of these credentials. For

Rebuffed By White House, ABA Finds It Still Has Role In Judicial Nominations Before Democratic-led Senate

By Anne Gearan

The Associated Press

Saturday, August 4, 2001

Three months into George W. Bush's presidency, the White House fired the American Bar Association from its job doing secret background checks on potential federal judges.

Losing that prestigious role after 50 years left many in the organization of 400,000 lawyers smarting and convinced still that the White House made a rash and largely political decision.

But lawyers gathered for the group's annual meeting said that for now, surprisingly little has changed.

The ABA continues to vet judges, and the newly Democratic-controlled Senate still relies on the ABA's recommendations. The difference is that the ABA does its work after the White House announces the name of a potential judge, instead of beforehand.

"The dynamic has changed, but we're still doing our work," said Bob Hirshon, who will become the ABA president during the six-day meeting.

Actually, the dynamic changed twice: in March when the White House gave the ABA the boot and then in May, when Vermont Sen. James Jeffords' defection from the Republicans gave Democrats control of the Senate.

In one sense, the Senate switch meant the ABA role was just as influential as before, Senate aides said. Democrats had said they would not confirm any Bush judge without an ABA rating, and after the switch they had the muscle to make the warning stick.

example: A nominee with an elite law school education, law review, a federal clerkship, and experience in both government and private practice would have only a 32% chance of getting the highest ABA rating if he were a Bush appointee, but a 77% chance if he were a Clinton appointee. A Clinton nominee with none or just one of these five credentials would still have at least a 45% chance of getting the highest rating.

The differences in how the ABA treated Bush-1 and Clinton nominees reached even to the internal decision making of the ABA committee. The ratings committee split its vote between two ratings 33% of the time when evaluating Bush-1 appointees, but it split only 17% of the time when evaluating Clinton appointees.

If Clinton nominees had been subjected to the same credentials-driven approach as Bush-1 candidates, only 46% of Clinton's confirmed nominees would have been unanimously rated as "Well Qualified." Instead, 62% actually received that top rating. On average Bush-1 and Clinton nominees had almost identically strong measured qualifications, yet they were not rated similarly.

The data suggest that when Bill Clinton took office, the ABA softened its standards, possibly emphasizing credentials such as temperament and philosophy that are harder to measure than experience and educational success. Now the ABA is back to rating Republican nominees -- and apparently is also back to its old harsh ways. The ABA ratings of George W. Bush's first 11 appellate nominees were released this summer. While it is much too soon to reach any firm conclusions about Bush-2, the pattern so far is not encouraging.

Although 62% of Clinton's 66 confirmed appellate nominees got the ABA's highest rating of unanimously "Well Qualified," only five of the first 11 new Bush nominees -- 45% -- have received the highest ABA rating, the same percentage that confirmed nominees received under the administration of the elder Bush.

At the end of the day, one nagging question remains: Why hasn't the ABA itself noticed the large political differences in its evaluative processes and worked harder to understand, explain or eliminate them? Now that there are hard data that support the claims of its critics, it would be good to see fewer denials and more introspection and reform.

You go ahead, and then we'll come back over here.

Q Okay. Can you talk about the upcoming fight over judicial nominations in the fall and what strategy you guys are going to use to get those through the Senate?

SEN. NICKLES: Well, let me just make a couple of comments. One, the leader gave me a little responsibility on trying to help shepherd some of the nominees through. And I will compliment Senator Reid and Senator Daschle; they have been cooperative. We've encouraged them to let's work together, see if we can't get some through. In the last couple of three weeks we've had some pretty good progress, and we want to continue that. It's not fair for this administration -- they're already --

Q But I'm talking specifically about judicial nominations.

SEN. NICKLES: I understand. I understand. It's not fair for this administration, they still have assistant secretaries that haven't been confirmed, and Cabinet secretaries are entitled to have their nominees confirmed.

Judges. The administration has just now sent -- they sent up the Circuit Court judges and they haven't been considered totally through the Judiciary Committee. Hopefully they will be. The administration is right now in the process of sending District Court judges through, and we're encouraging them to hurry up and get those, and they've been held up because of the FBI background checks and so on. But we hope and expect that the Judiciary Committee will work with all senators to get these judges in. We've got a lot of judges that are waiting, a lot of U.S. Attorneys, a lot of Marshals that have not been confirmed, that need to be confirmed. They should have been confirmed, frankly, in many cases by now, but we haven't got the nominations yet from the administration. So I'm not just faulting the Judiciary Committee, except for some of the Circuit Courts, they've been kind of slow on Circuit Court.

SEN. LOTT: Let me just give you some numbers, and be honest. First of all, I think that we should have had the U.S. Attorneys and U.S. Marshal nominees already pending before the Senate. They're not here, so you can't be critical of the Democrats for not moving that.

With regard to judges, I believe it's right that there have only been four federal marshals confirmed --

SEN. NICKLES: Judges.

SEN. LOTT: -- federal judges confirmed by the Senate.

SEN. NICKLES: Five.

SEN. LOTT: Did we do two yesterday?

SEN. NICKLES: Five. We did two yesterday.

SEN. LOTT: Okay, five. And we still have pending in the Judiciary Committee 26 maybe?

SEN. NICKLES: Twenty-something. Yeah.

SEN. LOTT: And several of them, about 10 or so, have been here since I believe May.

SEN. NICKLES: April, May, yeah.

SEN. LOTT: I mean, so there could have been hearings. And I don't believe they've even had hearings on most of them.

Now, the administration I believe will be sending a block of probably 50 or 60 nominations here momentarily, in the next few days, and those will be pending. So we really need to start moving aggressively on having hearings and reporting out judicial nominees, both judges and U.S. attorneys when we come back in September.

SEN. NICKLES: And the great majority of these will not even be controversial.

SEN. LOTT: That's right.

SEN. NICKLES: The great majority of these will be supported by both senator from their home states, and we expect those can go through pretty quickly.

Q Senator Lott.

Q Senator Lott, you know, last week, President Bush has backed the sons of Senator Jim Bunning and also the son of Strom Thurmond for judicial nominations for judgeships. Is he trying to win influence with the Senate through appointing people's relatives?

SEN. LOTT: I can't believe a president would be trying to win influence with the Senate! Every president does that. But also, he is prepared to select good men and women for federal positions, even if they are the sons and daughters of senators or judges for that matter. I know Strom Thurmond Jr. This is a 28-year-old, extremely sharp, very intelligent young lawyers with prosecutory (sic) experience. I'd pick him. And there are others. You know, Justice Rehnquist's daughter has been selected for a position in the administration. She is, from all accounts, a brilliant person who will do an excellent job. I don't think that ought to guarantee you'll be nominated or confirmed, but neither should it be prohibitive.

"It has been the committee's practice to (rely) on ABA ratings, and that has not changed," said David Carle, spokesman for Judiciary Chairman Sen. Patrick Leahy, a Democrat.

"There would have been a change if the Republicans were still in control. At least some Republicans were apparently willing to proceed without ABA ratings," Carle said.

In another sense, the ABA's role is fundamentally different. Before, most presidents quietly killed a nomination if the ABA found the candidate unqualified, and the name never became public.

That gave the ABA unparalleled veto power over White House decisions, said Leonard Leo, a vice president of the conservative Federalist Society.

Conservatives long have viewed the ABA with suspicion. Congressional Republicans, in particular, tend to perceive the organization as liberal-leaning, and blame a mixed ABA review of Robert Bork for defeat of the conservative nominated for the Supreme Court.

The ABA rejects the liberal label. The organization's leaders say there is a high wall between policy positions and its work evaluating judges. The ABA has lobbied for abortion rights and gun control.

"The decision by the White House cast a lot of light on the process, and caused people to think about the ABA's role," Leo said. "I think the jury is still out as to whether the role they play is valuable or not."

Many Federalist Society members are now advising Bush on judicial nominees, and several of its members were among Bush's initial crop of judicial picks.

The society's skeptical review of ABA activities, called "ABA Watch," this month includes a comparison of ABA ratings for Clinton administration appeals court nominees and those nominated by the first President George Bush.

The Federalist Society study found that when it came to nominees with similar legal experience, the Clinton choices were at least seven times more likely to win the highest "well-qualified" ABA rating.

Northwestern University law professor James Lindgren, who did the analysis, also looked at some of the first nominees from the current Bush administration, Leo said.

"We are seeing some of the same patterns, although the patterns are not as stark," Leo said.

The ABA has finished its investigations of 17 of Bush's first 44 nominees for federal trial and appeals courts, and has taken about the same time to prepare the reports as it did before, ABA leaders and Senate aides said.

So far, the ABA has rated each candidate "qualified" or "well-qualified."

"We may not know the answer to this question for awhile _ whether the information we receive when a name is in the public domain is the same versus the information we received the last 50 years," the ABA's Hirshon said.

The ABA maintains that so long as the potential nominee's name was not yet public, friends or co-workers can speak without risk of retribution and without publicly sully a nominee's reputation.

Although she was blindsided by the White House decision in March, current ABA president Martha Barnett now sounds sanguine about the change.

"This is one of those issues that created angst in the beginning, but has now worked out well and is a non-issue," she said.

United Senate Confirms Mueller To Head FBI; Selection: Unanimous Vote Cements Bush's Nomination. Bickering Over Nominees For Other Posts Gets Worse

Despite partisan wrangling over a new batch of White House nominations, the Senate on Thursday gave quick and unanimous approval to one of President Bush's most closely watched picks as it confirmed San Francisco prosecutor Robert S. Mueller to lead the besieged FBI.

Mueller, 56, will take over an agency that has seen its reputation as the nation's premier law enforcement agency badly tarnished by recent episodes of espionage, witness intimidation, lost documents, missing weapons and other embarrassments within its ranks.

"We know he has a difficult job ahead of him," said Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, as he ticked off a list of recent blunders at the FBI.

But Leahy said Mueller, a veteran prosecutor credited with turning around the U.S. attorney's office in San Francisco after his appointment there in 1998, is the right man for the job. "I applaud President Bush for his appointment," the senator said.

Leahy's committee gave Mueller a unanimous vote of approval Thursday after two days of hearings earlier in the week that were marked by unstinting praise for Mueller and widespread condemnation of the FBI. Hours after the committee vote, the full Senate approved Mueller for the job on a 98-0 vote.

Mueller soon will undergo surgery for prostate cancer, and no date has been set for his takeover at the FBI, although Justice Department aides indicated it might not happen for several weeks.

Atty. Gen. John Ashcroft, who lobbied hard for the former Marine, said that Mueller "will serve with fidelity, bravery and integrity" and that his background in criminal law brings "an invaluable perspective to the Department of Justice."

Mueller's confirmation followed the Senate's approval earlier this week of Rep. Asa Hutchinson (R-Ark.) as head of the Drug Enforcement Administration and former Senate Sergeant-at-Arms James Ziglar as head of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

But the votes came amid stepped-up political bickering Thursday over some of Bush's other nominations.

Democrats on the Senate Commerce Committee voted down Bush's pick of Mary Sheila Gall as head of the Consumer Product Safety Commission. And a new round of judicial nominations by the White House set off a round of political accusations.

The White House nominated 18 federal judges Thursday, including 15 for seats on district courts and three for the federal claims court.

The selections were concentrated in states that have two Republican senators, with four judges nominated in Oklahoma and three in Kentucky. In states such as California and New York, where both senators are Democrats and the effort to find acceptable candidates may prove more protracted, the White House does not expect to nominate judicial candidates until the fall.

Bush administration officials immediately warned Senate Democrats that they have become frustrated with what they consider unnecessary delays in considering the White House's judicial nominations, which now total 44.

Administration officials complained that, while they have been quick to nominate judges at a rate outpacing those of past presidencies, the Democratic-controlled Senate has approved only four judges so far and has not even scheduled hearings for many candidates. Many districts remain short of judges as a result, Bush advisors said.

"There's really in the administration's view no legitimate justification--given the vacancy crisis--for all these weeks to have passed without hearings," said a senior administration official who asked not to be identified. Bush "expects and is entitled to the same fair treatment for his nominees" as past presidents have received, the official said.

But Leahy said the Judiciary Committee has pushed through the nominations of Mueller and other candidates at a very quick pace, and his aides said the White House has slowed the process by limiting the American Bar Assn.'s traditional role in reviewing nominees.

One of Thursday's judicial nominations who could prove controversial is David Bunning, a 35-year-old assistant U.S. attorney in Kentucky tapped for the federal bench there. Bunning is the son of Sen. Jim Bunning (R-Ky.), and his nomination came a day after Bush nominated Strom

Thurmond Jr., the 28-year-old son of the Senate's senior member, to be the U.S. attorney in South Carolina.

Bunning has been a lawyer for 10 years, two years less than the ABA generally recommends for a lifetime appointment to the federal bench.

Ralph Neas, head of People for the American Way, a liberal public-interest group that has criticized Bush for allegedly trying to pack the courts with "right-wing ideologues," said he wants the Bunning nomination to get a close look.

"Thirty-five years old is very young, and I think it's a legitimate issue to question whether this nominee has the qualifications needed to be a federal judge," he said.

But Bush administration officials said Bunning has a proven record as a prosecutor and is well qualified for the job.

Pitch Made For Approval Of Judicial Nominees

By Tom Brune

Newsday

President George W. Bush is "entitled" to have all of the judicial candidates he has nominated so far confirmed by the Democratic-controlled Senate by the end of the year, an administration official said yesterday.

The Bush administration official made that claim in announcing 16 new judicial nominations while blasting the Senate Judiciary Committee for failing to act more quickly on judicial candidates Bush has nominated in the past three months.

Administration officials also said they expect to nominate candidates to fill the more than 100 vacancies on the federal bench by the end of the year, which would put a distinctly Republican stamp on the federal judiciary.

Included among yesterday's nominees is the 35-year-old son of Sen. Jim Bunning (R-Ky.) to be a federal judge in Kentucky. On Wednesday, Bush tapped the 29-year-old son of Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) to be U.S. attorney of South Carolina.

Since May, Bush has nominated 44 candidates for the federal bench, and the Senate has confirmed three nominees and appeared likely to confirm a fourth before going on a monthlong recess after today.

An aide to Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) rejected criticism of the pace of the committee's confirmation hearings. "Any fair look at this committee's schedule for the past month shows how brisk it has been," said Leahy spokesman David Carle, noting that it had expedited hearings of the nominees for directors of the FBI and Drug Enforcement Agency.

Carle also refrained from making any promises that all of the Bush judicial nominees would be confirmed by year's end. "It depends on what nominees the president sends," he said.

Bush officials stepped up pressure on Senate Democrats to approve more judicial candidates yesterday after the Senate Commerce Committee, in a separate action, handed Bush his first defeat of a nominee - rejecting his choice for Consumer Product Safety Commission chairman.

"In the past three administrations, there has been a very long-standing bipartisan tradition of [judicial] nominees who were named prior to the August recess being confirmed in the first year of their presidency," said White House spokesman Ari Fleischer.

"Consistent with that bipartisan history, the president hopes and urges that the Senate will move forward and act on all 44 of his [judicial] nominations this year," he said.

Another administration official, speaking on the condition he not be named, however, went further, saying, "We expect and we are entitled to and we would be satisfied if the . . . judges were confirmed."

Most of those nominated yesterday were from states represented by two Republican senators.

Nominated for the First Circuit of Appeals was Jeffrey R. Howard, who came in third in the Republican primary for governor of New Hampshire last year and whose campaign consultant was cited by state officials for improper campaign activities. Howard is a former U.S. attorney and New Hampshire attorney general.

Nominated for the 10th Circuit of Appeals was Terrence L. O'Brien, who after retiring as a Wyoming state court judge won the Republican nomination for a congressional seat as a write-in candidate, but then withdrew before the general election last year.

Nominated for the Eastern District of Kentucky was David Bunning, who since 1991 has been a federal prosecutor.

Meanwhile, Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.) used a procedural maneuver to delay the nomination of Deborah Daniels as assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Office of Justice Programs because he said she has not sufficiently answered questions about how she would manage the agency's gun programs. The committee may take up the Daniels nomination in September, when Congress returns from its August recess.

Three Nominees Likely To Win U.S. Judgeships, Lawyers Say Bunning's Son May Face Scrutiny On His Experience

President Bush's three federal judgeship nominees for Kentucky, including the son of U.S. Sen. Jim Bunning, are likely to win Senate confirmation, several prominent Kentucky attorneys said yesterday.

But the experience of David Bunning may get close scrutiny at Senate Judiciary Committee confirmation hearings. The 35-year-old son of the junior senator from Kentucky is a federal prosecutor in Covington.

If confirmed, David Bunning would be the youngest lawyer appointed a federal judge in Kentucky since the American Bar Association began evaluating nominees in 1948. The timetable

Ashcroft tells lawyers Bush has no litmus tests for judges
[from Chicago Tribune website]
By Anne Gearan
Associated Press Writer
Published August 7, 2001, 2:59 PM CDT

President Bush has no litmus tests for picking federal judges, Attorney General John Ashcroft assured the American Bar Association in a speech in Chicago today.

Ashcroft did not discuss the White House decision to end the lawyers' traditional role in vetting candidates for the bench. He strongly endorsed several core conservative themes, including the premise that judges should judge narrowly and not read rights into laws or the Constitution that are not written there.

"The president has unequivocally rejected any notion of an issue-specific or political litmus test," Ashcroft said, "insisting only that the only value his candidates share is a dedication to the rule of law and an understanding of the proper role of a federal judge - a role that leaves policy-making to the American people and their elected representatives."

Many conservatives have long viewed the ABA as liberal-leaning and biased in favor of judges who do not follow that model of judicial restraint. Congressional Republicans, in particular, have blamed a mixed ABA review of conservative Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork for his 1987 Senate defeat.

Since the Eisenhower administration, the ABA has conducted private background checks on people the president was considering for judgeships. Poor reports from the ABA scuttled some selections and damaged the Senate chances of others.

The Bush White House did not cite politics or ideology in booting the ABA in March, saying no outside group should have special control over a president's picks for lifetime judicial posts.

"As you may know, there are some who have called into doubt the impartiality of the ABA's judicial ratings," Ashcroft said.

He cited a recent study by Northwestern University law professor James Lindgren, which claimed that the ABA was as much as 10 times more likely to give its highest ratings to Clinton administration choices than to nominees of President Bush's father.

"Professor Lindgren attributes this disparity to a political bias in favor of liberal judges," Ashcroft said, without offering his own view. "Undoubtedly, there are others who argue that no such bias exists. In any event, I think we can agree that no political bias should exist."

The ABA has continued to rate judicial picks, but the investigations are now done after a nominee's name is public instead of beforehand. Senate Democrats, who took control of the body after Bush's decision, say they will not hold a hearing on a judge candidate until they get an ABA report.

Ashcroft said he is "heartened" by the ABA's high ratings for the first round of White House judicial nominees, and said he is confident that, "judged by the same standards used to rate the last administration, the vast majority of President Bush's nominees will continue to receive" high ABA marks.

Incoming ABA president Bob Hirshon, asked to comment on the Lindgren report, cited the 26 judicial candidates whose names have gone to the Senate with "not-qualified" ratings from the ABA. Twenty-three were nominated by Democratic presidents, Hirshon said. "I just don't see the bias," he said.

Earlier today, Ashcroft said Congress should strengthen laws against money laundering. In a speech to a Chicago police conference on organized crime, Ashcroft said current laws are full of loopholes that make it difficult to combat organized crime groups smuggling dirty money in and out of the country. "Our money laundering laws have not changed significantly since they were enacted" in the 1970s, Ashcroft said in remarks prepared for a conference on organized crime.

New laws should target bulk cash smuggling, transporting cash proceeds from drug deals on highways or airplanes, and foreign criminals who smuggle money into the United States,

Ashcroft said.

Ashcroft tells lawyers Bush has no litmus tests for judges
[from Chicago Tribune website]

President Bush has no litmus tests for picking federal judges, Attorney General John Ashcroft assured the American Bar Association in a speech in Chicago today.

Ashcroft did not discuss the White House decision to end the lawyers' traditional role in vetting candidates for the bench. He strongly endorsed several core conservative themes, including the premise that judges should judge narrowly and not read rights into laws or the Constitution that are not written there.

"The president has unequivocally rejected any notion of an issue-specific or political litmus test," Ashcroft said, "insisting only that the only value his candidates share is a dedication to the rule of law and an understanding of the proper role of a federal judge - a role that leaves policy-making to the American people and their elected representatives."

Many conservatives have long viewed the ABA as liberal-leaning and biased in favor of judges who do not follow that model of judicial restraint. Congressional Republicans, in particular, have blamed a mixed ABA review of conservative Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork for his 1987 Senate defeat.

Since the Eisenhower administration, the ABA has conducted private background checks on people the president was considering for judgeships. Poor reports from the ABA scuttled some selections and damaged the Senate chances of others.

The Bush White House did not cite politics or ideology in booting the ABA in March, saying no outside group should have special control over a president's picks for lifetime judicial posts.

"As you may know, there are some who have called into doubt the impartiality of the ABA's judicial ratings," Ashcroft said.

He cited a recent study by Northwestern University law professor James Lindgren, which claimed that the ABA was as much as 10 times more likely to give its highest ratings to Clinton administration choices than to nominees of President Bush's father.

"Professor Lindgren attributes this disparity to a political bias in favor of liberal judges," Ashcroft said, without offering his own view. "Undoubtedly, there are others who argue that no such bias exists. In any event, I think we can agree that no political bias should exist."

The ABA has continued to rate judicial picks, but the investigations are now done after a nominee's name is public instead of beforehand. Senate Democrats, who took control of the body after Bush's decision, say they will not hold a hearing on a judge candidate until they get an ABA report.

Ashcroft said he is "heartened" by the ABA's high ratings for the first round of White House judicial nominees, and said he is confident that, "judged by the same standards used to rate the last administration, the vast majority of President Bush's nominees will continue to receive" high ABA marks.

Incoming ABA president Bob Hirshon, asked to comment on the Lindgren report, cited the 26 judicial candidates whose names have gone to the Senate with "not-qualified" ratings from the ABA. Twenty-three were nominated by Democratic presidents, Hirshon said. "I just don't see the bias," he said.

Earlier today, Ashcroft said Congress should strengthen laws against money laundering. In a speech to a Chicago police conference on organized crime, Ashcroft said current laws are full of loopholes that make it difficult to combat organized crime groups smuggling dirty money in and out of the country. "Our money laundering laws have not changed significantly since they were enacted" in the 1970s, Ashcroft said in remarks prepared for a conference on organized crime.

New laws should target bulk cash smuggling, transporting cash proceeds from drug deals on highways or airplanes, and foreign criminals who smuggle money into the United States,

Ashcroft said.

Ashcroft tells lawyers Bush has no litmus tests for judges
[from Chicago Tribune website]
By Anne Gearan
Associated Press Writer

President Bush has no litmus tests for picking federal judges, Attorney General John Ashcroft assured the American Bar Association in a speech in Chicago today.

Ashcroft did not discuss the White House decision to end the lawyers' traditional role in vetting candidates for the bench. He strongly endorsed several core conservative themes, including the premise that judges should judge narrowly and not read rights into laws or the Constitution that are not written there.

"The president has unequivocally rejected any notion of an issue-specific or political litmus test," Ashcroft said, "insisting only that the only value his candidates share is a dedication to the rule of law and an understanding of the proper role of a federal judge - a role that leaves policy-making to the American people and their elected representatives."

Many conservatives have long viewed the ABA as liberal-leaning and biased in favor of judges who do not follow that model of judicial restraint. Congressional Republicans, in particular, have blamed a mixed ABA review of conservative Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork for his 1987 Senate defeat.

Since the Eisenhower administration, the ABA has conducted private background checks on people the president was considering for judgeships. Poor reports from the ABA scuttled some selections and damaged the Senate chances of others.

The Bush White House did not cite politics or ideology in booting the ABA in March, saying no outside group should have special control over a president's picks for lifetime judicial posts.

"As you may know, there are some who have called into doubt the impartiality of the ABA's judicial ratings," Ashcroft said.

He cited a recent study by Northwestern University law professor James Lindgren, which claimed that the ABA was as much as 10 times more likely to give its highest ratings to Clinton administration choices than to nominees of President Bush's father.

"Professor Lindgren attributes this disparity to a political bias in favor of liberal judges," Ashcroft said, without offering his own view. "Undoubtedly, there are others who argue that no such bias exists. In any event, I think we can agree that no political bias should exist."

The ABA has continued to rate judicial picks, but the investigations are now done after a nominee's name is public instead of beforehand. Senate Democrats, who took control of the body after Bush's decision, say they will not hold a hearing on a judge candidate until they get an ABA report.

Ashcroft said he is "heartened" by the ABA's high ratings for the first round of White House judicial nominees, and said he is confident that, "judged by the same standards used to rate the last administration, the vast majority of President Bush's nominees will continue to receive" high ABA marks.

Incoming ABA president Bob Hirshon, asked to comment on the Lindgren report, cited the 26 judicial candidates whose names have gone to the Senate with "not-qualified" ratings from the ABA. Twenty-three were nominated by Democratic presidents, Hirshon said. "I just don't see the bias," he said.

Earlier today, Ashcroft said Congress should strengthen laws against money laundering. In a speech to a Chicago police conference on organized crime, Ashcroft said current laws are full of loopholes that make it difficult to combat organized crime groups smuggling dirty money in and out of the country. "Our money laundering laws have not changed significantly since they were enacted" in the 1970s, Ashcroft said in remarks prepared for a conference on organized crime.

New laws should target bulk cash smuggling, transporting cash proceeds from drug deals on highways or airplanes, and foreign criminals who smuggle money into the United States,

Ashcroft said.

Mr. John Ashcroft, Attorney General
United States Department of Justice
521 Twelfth Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530-0006

Dear Mr. Attorney General:

The New York Times reports that your office has decided to appear in the Adarand case to be heard this next term in the Supreme Court. The report suggests that you will appear in support of the proposition that it is no violation of the Fifth Amendment for the United States to encourage and, indeed, to pay a bonus to contractors when they engage in specific, knowing acts of racial discrimination in subcontracting. I am genuinely startled to hear that this may be the position you mean to take and would urge you seriously to reconsider.

Under the act of Congress, as currently applied and defended, a contractor who will not engage in acts of racial discrimination is treated less well by the government than one who will. In brief, a contractor who will not knowingly participate in any arrangement pursuant to which he discards a bid because of the race of the bidder, in order to accept a different (even if higher) bid from another person distinguishable solely by race, is treated less well by the government than a contractor who will, and who does, practice racial discrimination against subcontractors by passing them by solely because of their race, enabling him thereby to award the contract to another to be racially favored.

That this act was (unsuccessfully) defended during the Clinton administration in the Supreme Court, while disappointing to many, was nonetheless no surprise. That administration candidly and consistently declared itself committed to the maintenance and use of racial classifications to employ in varieties of programs involving specific acts of racial discrimination (namely such acts as it felt comfortable to describe and to defend as "affirmative" forms of racial discrimination). The most ordinary kind of program of that sort is merely that which "disprefers" some persons by race when there are felt to be too many of them vis-a-vis those of other races, such that "plus" points should be assigned to some by race in order that, with the advantage of these racially-assigned plus points, they will be jumped ahead of others given no plus points of their own.

Though the Supreme Court itself has found no warrant for these racially discriminatory practices in any of its recent decisions, Mr. Clinton found it attractive to endorse them even so. But one had thought one of the vital distinctions between Mr. Bush and Mr. Gore was that Mr. Gore was committed to a continuing regime of racial discrimination of the kind Mr. Clinton consistently promoted (i.e., whenever it could be given color of approval with the label of "affirmative" action), but that Mr. Bush would present a very different face to this country. Many believed it would be a new face: a face that would assure all that none need ever fear that "their" race (whatever it might be) would ever be used against them, again, by the government of the United States. Is this not to be the case?

It was an assurance I believe that millions of people in this country have desired and many have waited a lifetime to hope to see fulfilled. It was, moreover, a hope that many of your own statements of position seemed strongly to echo as well. But now, what is to become of it? Now, are we left to see it unfulfilled, "set aside" as it were, even as various subcontractors are themselves racially set aside by the racial-discrimination bonus-paying act it is reported you mean to sustain before the Supreme Court of the United States? I trust this is not so.

It is said that your office may seek to defend the case on the basis that the government's formula for paying bonuses for deliberate acts of racial discrimination by contractors is meant merely to match unidentified acts of racial discrimination by other private contractors--thus, in some sense, it will serve merely to offset those wrongful acts. The reasoning appears to be that this arrangement merely puts things in fair balance, i.e., roughly as they would be with no discrimination. The thesis, however, is dismaying: thus that one wrong deserves a corresponding wrong. That if some contractors covertly discriminate against some subcontractors by race, it is merely affirmative action for the government to encourage other contractors to "even" the playing field by discriminating against an equivalent number of other subcontractors by race.

I very much hope the Supreme Court does not agree. Nor do I think it should. This is just one more unworthy rationale to sustain the indefensible. The government's position should be steadfastly to oppose racial discrimination in any form, not to perpetuate it, rather, to bring it to an utter end.

I began my professional career in the Civil Rights Division decades ago, in the Voting Rights Section. We--those of us who worked there--were committed to assure conditions of no racial discrimination in respect to voting. From that past into academic life, even to today, I have never given up the expectation that, eventually, no government in this country would be tolerated that seeks to classify, divide, allocate, and discriminate by race. I cannot tell you of my disappointment if your office begins in this, the very first year of the twenty-first century, by finding "reason" to continue to feature racial classifications, and policies of discrimination, in our laws.

I cannot say it is a betrayal of many citizens who gave their vote to Mr. Bush, on a different hope and different understanding, for I do not know whether that is true. I can say, however, that it is assuredly a profound disappointment: one which may cut from his office and from yours what I and many others frankly believed was a worthy commitment to a better principle. It appeared to be a commitment to a better vision pursuant to which no one in this country would any longer be made to worry, to consume themselves with anxiety, and to ask: "Will my race be used to judge me? Will it be used to affect me? Will it be used to hurt me in some way? Will I be made to stand in a different line, a separate racial queue?"

I and others hoped that this administration would be able to answer those questions, and to say the answer to each is "No," and so to put them all to rest. Indeed, I had hoped this administration would declare something of the following sort, even if not in these particular words: "There is never to be a time that the policies or practices of this administration will provide reason for any to fear, or for any to harbor these questions, or for any among us to suffer these worries. We would support no program, no policy, no act of government, pursuant to which any basis for such a fear, or practice, or anxiety could arise. It is, rather, our intention to eliminate all foundations for just such humiliating and debasing practices, so far as it is within our capacity altogether to do. It is the commitment we make to this country and to all its people. It is how we want to be judged." I wish there were someone in this administration who could declare utterances such as these.

I have written elsewhere what I believe can be called "Affirmative" actions in a proper sense. None embrace any of the discriminatory practices reflected in the government's current policies. A reprint copy is enclosed. In the meantime, I very much hope that the New York Times report was in error. If not, then I hope that your office might even now reconsider what principle it wants to carry into the Supreme Court, and how it wants to be seen to the people of the United States.

Sincerely,

William Van Alstyne

FYI, You, or someone on your staff, are cordially invited to a meeting this Friday, August 10, 2001, at 10:00 a.m. in room 248 of the Old Executive Office Building to review the agencies' comments on the Federalism executive order. If someone from your office would like to attend, please call me (395-3563) or e-mail me with the person's name and room number so that I can get a copy of the comments to the person. There are many comments so I would expect the meeting to run about 1 1/2 hours. Thank you very much, Mac

"I am considering holding another judicial confirmation hearing in August, during the Senate recess. No such hearing was held during any of the last six years. If we proceed, it may be the first time a judicial confirmation hearing was held during the August recess."

Leahy is expected to hold the hearing on Aug. 27, his press secretary, David Carle, said Tuesday.

According to Carle, no such recess hearings had been held in the Judiciary Committee at least since 1989.

Leahy had consulted with ranking member Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), before going ahead with his plans, Carle said.

According to Senate Historian Richard Baker, only one member of the Judiciary Committee needs be present to conduct a hearing, although 10 senators are required to report a nomination.

Spokesmen for half-a-dozen Judiciary Committee members contacted Tuesday said they had not yet been informed of the Aug. 27 hearing and could not say whether their members would attend.

Leahy has been considering the unusual move for several reasons, Carle said, including the length of time it took for the Senate to approve an organizing resolution after Sen. Jim Jeffords' (I.-Vt.) defection gave Democrats control of the Senate.

"This is a highly unusual year," Carle said. "The Senate has changed hands three times. The Senate and the committee were only permitted to organize five weeks ago. So the confirmation process for judicial nominees has only been under way since mid-year."

Carle said the committee has already pursued "a brisk confirmation hearing schedule," including prompt consideration of Bush's nominees for the heads of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Drug Enforcement Administration and Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Bush sent another batch of judicial nominees to the Senate for consideration last week. Carle said the administration has now submitted 20 nominees for the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and 20 for various district courts.

Carle said it has yet to be determined which of these nominees will be included in the hearing this month.

The pace of nominations has proved to be a subject of contention between Democrats and Republicans.

After Sen. Larry Craig (R-Idaho) last week complained on the Senate floor about a nominee awaiting a Judiciary hearing, urging Leahy to act faster, Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) immediately fired back.

"I feel I may need to call an ambulance. I think I just bit off my tongue," Daschle said. "I will say in all sincerity that I think he just gave the speech that I have repeated probably 25 or 30 times over the last six years, verbatim. I can't tell you how many people languished for not days or weeks but years. But I have said on this floor repeatedly that we will not engage in payback."

On July 30, Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) complained to reporters that the Senate at that time had only confirmed three federal judges. (Two more have since been confirmed.)

"And that's all," he said. "So I would hope that we could make some progress this week on the floor of the Senate on nominations and can get some commitments to make even a lot more progress when we come back in September."

But Leahy said some vacancies should have been filled in the past several years but were left open by the Republican-controlled Senate. He also said this year's pace of confirmations compares "most favorably" with the last six years.

On Friday, Assistant Minority Leader Don Nickles (R-Okla.) admitted the White House was partly to blame for delays in the confirmation of judges. "We've got a lot of judges that are waiting, a lot of U.S. attorneys, a lot of marshals that have not been confirmed, that need to be confirmed," Nickles said. "They should have been confirmed, frankly, in many cases by now, but we haven't got the nominations yet from the administration. So I'm not just faulting the Judiciary Committee, except for some of the circuit courts, they've been kind of slow on [the] circuit court."

Ashcroft Asks ABA For Help

By Al Swanson

United Press International

Tuesday, August 7, 2001

U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft Tuesday asked the American Bar Association for help to pressure the Senate to move forward and act on President Bush's 44 pending nominees for federal judgeships.

Ashcroft told the ABA House of Delegates "the American people deserve a federal judiciary operating at full strength and peak efficiency, providing equal access to speedy justice."

Ashcroft chided the Senate Judiciary Committee for holding just one hearing on 11 nominees for federal court vacancies made on May 9. Eight of them were nominated to vacancies that had been classified "judicial emergencies" by the Administrative Court of the United States.

"The administration is doing its part," he said. "Now the Senate and those organizations involved in the process, including the ABA, must join us in working for the prompt confirmation of the outstanding men and women the president has nominated to be federal judges."

The ABA has completed rating the qualifications of 17 of 44 Bush nominees to federal courts, finding them all either "qualified" or "well-qualified."

In March, Bush stopped using the ABA ratings of judicial nominees but the Senate, under Democratic leadership, has continued to use the evaluations.

He said delays in the Senate hearings had raised the specter of the old adage: "Justice delayed is justice denied."

Ashcroft called the Bush nominees models of judicial restraint.

"Judicial restraint means if the Constitution says you have a right to compensation when the government takes your property, then a judge cannot create exceptions for property that the government really doesn't want to pay for, by letting the government so heavily regulate the property as to make it worthless."

The nation's chief law enforcement officer said an independent federal judiciary, insulated from the whims of electoral politics, was essential to settling disputes between the legislative and the executive and maintaining respect for the law.

"Judges who exercise judicial restraint understand the limit of their power," he told the audience of lawyers.

"Judicial restraint means judges refusing to create on their own a criminal justice system that lets clearly guilty criminals off on a technicality."

Ashcroft, a lawyer and former Republican governor from Missouri, was a member of the Judiciary Committee and chairman of the Constitution subcommittee during his years in the Senate.

"Academic discussions of judicial activism and restraint have done little to enlighten the American public," he said. "The decisions we will ask our federal judges to make -- the issues we will expect them to weigh -- will affect each and every one of us in ways large and small."

Earlier, Ashcroft told law enforcement officers at a conference on organized crime in Chicago that Congress should close loopholes in the law to make it more difficult for drug dealers, terrorists and other criminals to launder money.

The Justice Department may recommend tightening federal laws to halt smuggling of large amounts of cash by making transporting more than $10,000 in cash proceeds from criminal acts across U.S. borders a federal offense. The money would be subject to confiscation.

Ashcroft Prods ABA To Quickly Vet Judge Nominees

U.S. Attorney General John D. Ashcroft Tuesday called for prompt Senate action on President Bush's judicial nominees and urged the American Bar Association to quickly and thoroughly review the nominees.

"So far the confirmation process has moved slowly," Ashcroft told the ABA's House of Delegates in the Grand Ballroom of the Hyatt Regency Hotel.

"The administration is doing its part. Now the Senate and those organizations involved in the process, including the ABA, must join us in working for the prompt confirmation of the outstanding men and women the president has nominated to the federal bench."

He said the Senate should approve all 44 of Bush's nominees by the end of the year.

Ashcroft made no mention of the Bush administration's decision only five months ago to end the ABA's half-century role of advance vetting of prospective federal judges before the president makes the nominations public.

Since Bush took that action, Democratic senators have asked the ABA to evaluate judicial nominees before the U.S. Senate acts on them.

In his speech, Ashcroft also spoke out against judicial activism and against judges who release "clearly guilty criminals" on technicalities. This, he said, leads to increased crime.

The House of Delegates applauded one remark, when Ashcroft said "I think we can agree that no political bias should exist" in the nomination and confirmation of judges.

"As you know," Ashcroft told the delegates, "there are some who have called into doubt the impartiality of the ABA's judicial ratings."

The attorney general quoted a study by Northwestern University law Professor James Lindgren, who found that President Bill Clinton's judicial nominees "had more than 10 times better odds of getting the ABA's highest rating than similar credentialed former-President Bush's appointees."

"Professor Lindgren attributes this disparity to a political bias in favor of liberal judges," Ashcroft told the ABA delegates.

"Undoubtedly," Ashcroft added, "there are others who argue that no such bias exists. In any event, I think we can agree that no political bias should exist."

He said he was "heartened by the ABA's ratings thus far" of Bush's nominees and was "confident that, judged by the same standards used to rate the last administration, the vast majority of President Bush's nominees will continue to receive 'well qualified' ratings."

The ABA has reviewed 17 of Bush's judicial nominees and "rated every one of them qualified.... In fact, you have rated 70 per cent of these candidates 'well qualified,' the ABA's highest rating," the attorney general said.

"Currently, there is a serious number of vacancies on the federal courts, 108 vacancies out of 862 positions," Ashcroft said. "More than 12 per cent of the court is vacant. President Bush has recognized the urgency of this problem and has made it one of his top priorities. He has nominated judges at a record pace, 44 judicial candidates so far this year."

By comparison, Ashcroft said, President Ronald Reagan had made 13 judicial nominations before the end of August 1981; George H.W. Bush had made eight such nominations by the end of August 1989; and Clinton had made 13 before the end of August 1993.

Ashcroft said that in the first year of each of the past three presidential administrations, "all but one of the judicial nominees who were nominated before the end of the August recess were confirmed in the first year of the presidency.

"The one nominee who was not confirmed was rated 'not qualified' by the ABA. Consistent with that history, the Senate should move forward and act on all 44 of President Bush's nominations ... this year."

Ashcroft noted that the Senate has a long way to go. He said Bush announced 11 judicial nominations on May 9, "two months before Presidents Reagan or Clinton made their first nominations." Eight of those 11 were nominated to judicial vacancies classified as "judicial emergencies" by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts, Ashcroft said.

The ABA found all of the first 11 nominations "to be either qualified or well qualified for judicial office ... yet only one of those 11 nominees has received a hearing in the Senate Judiciary Committee," the attorney general said.

He commended the Senate for acting promptly on non-judicial appointments, including in the last two weeks a new commissioner of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, a new head of the Drug Enforcement Administration, and a new FBI director.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vermont, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, understands the urgency of acting on Bush's judicial nominees, said Ashcroft. He told the delegates, "I ask you to help him in ensuring that the rest of the Senate places as high a priority on these nominations as does the president."

Back in March, White House Counsel Al Gonzales pointed out that the ABA has done advocacy work on certain public policies such as support for abortion and a call for a death penalty moratorium. Gonzales said that, in that light, the ABA should not have "a preferential arrangement" whereby it got first crack at examining potential judicial nominees.

On the issue of judicial activism, Ashcroft quoted Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter as saying, "The highest exercise of judicial duty is to subordinate one's personal will and one's private views to the law."

Judicial activism, said Ashcroft, deprives the voters of recourse to their legislature for policy decisions.

McConnell Says East Kentucky Judges Will Prove Capable

The three nominees for federal judgeships in eastern Kentucky will prove capable jurists over the years, Sen. Mitch McConnell said Wednesday, though he acknowledged he does not know one of the nominees.

McConnell also dismissed any notion that personal relationships influenced the choices of any of the nominees. "That happens sometimes," McConnell said.

David Bunning, the son of U.S. Sen. Jim Bunning, is one of the nominees. Another is Karen Caldwell, a former U.S. Attorney for the eastern district who once dated McConnell. The third nominee is Danny Reeves, a Lexington lawyer.

McConnell said he personally knows only two of the nominees and Bunning knows only two. He refused to elaborate.

"You've got to pick people somehow," McConnell told the Louisville Forum. "I think we did a good job and I think the people in eastern Kentucky will discover that over the years."

If confirmed, federal judges hold lifetime jobs and can be removed only by impeachment in the Congress.

There has been some muted criticism of the nominees because they lack eastern Kentucky connections. The nominations by President Bush, which have yet to be considered by the Senate are to fill two vacancies and a new judgeship, including seats in London and Pikeville.

Bunning's qualifications have been questioned because he has been practicing law for only 10 years, all as an assistant prosecutor in the U.S. Attorney's office. The American Bar Association guidelines generally suggest a minimum of 12 years experience for a federal judge.

McConnell, who has been in the Senate for 17 years and will be running for re-election in 2002, fielded questions from forum members on a range of topics, from missile defense to a separate state for Palestinians.

He answered pointedly on a couple of inquiries, especially one about his own legislative record.

McConnell said a question posed about what bills he has sponsored in three terms sounded like it came from an opponent, though the forum is officially neutral and nonpartisan.

McConnell said he has been primary sponsor on numerous important items, mostly appropriations initiatives in the area of foreign aid. McConnell said he would answer the question more fully during his campaign.

On the topic of drilling for oil in the Alaskan wilderness, McConnell said in some respects the issue boiled down to driving habits. McConnell said more people would be killed if fewer people drove large sport utility vehicles.

"Who's going to be willing to sacrifice a member of their family by getting into a smaller car?" McConnell wondered.

SNOW: And we're back with Fred, Mort, and Mara.

Mort, an interesting speech John Ashcroft gave to the American Bar Association, in part because it was just taking it right to them in the sense of saying, "OK. We're going to try not to use litmus tests. Why don't you try to do the same?" Is he right?

KONDRACK: Well, you know, in this case, I -- I think that he -- this is a case of it all depends on what the meaning of the word "litmus" is because, clearly, George Bush and John Ashcroft have an idea.

He says, "We're not going to make any -- we're not going to have any political litmus tests," and I even think he said ideological litmus tests. On the other hand, they do have a judicial litmus test, and that is restraint...

LIASSON: Right.

KONDRACK: ... you know, that you should not -- that a judge should not make law, should leave the process to the legislature and all that. Now he did -- what he did not say -- he did not point at the ABA and accuse them of -- of having a political bias, which this Northwestern University professor who he cited actually found, that the ABA was 10 times more likely to approve a judge nominated by Bill Clinton than George Bush's father.

BARNES: Yeah. You know, look, there is -- the -- this idea of a litmus test -- when they say there isn't one, they're really talking about Roe v. Wade, and -- and they do not ask these judicial nominees "Would you vote to overturn Roe v. Wade?" I mean, that's just a question that's not asked.

That's the -- that's the main litmus test they're talking about, to have a judicial conservative. They did not -- I mean, Bush has not appointed all judicial conservatives. As a matter of fact, he's appointed some Democrats and some more liberal judges.

Now the ones at issue, of course, with this Democratic Senate are the judicial conservatives, and he spoke out very strongly in favor of them, particularly, as you might guess in this administration that wants to win Latino votes, in favor of a man named Miguel Estrada, who's actually from - - born in Honduras, and has been nominated the -- to the...

Ashcroft Pushes Senate On Judicial Nominees; Speech Fuels Battle Over Confirmations

By Dan Eggen

The Washington Post

Wednesday, August 8, 2001

Attorney General John D. Ashcroft urged the Senate yesterday to speed up confirmation of the Bush administration's nominees for the federal bench, complaining that the "process has moved slowly" and is contributing to backlogs in the federal courts.

In a speech to the American Bar Association in Chicago, Ashcroft said that only one of 11 judges nominated to U.S. circuit courts this year has had a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. Eight of those positions have been classified as "judicial emergencies" because they have stood vacant for so long, he said.

"I know I don't need to tell you that judicial vacancies mean delays in the time it takes to have one's case heard," Ashcroft said at the ABA's annual conference. "Justice delayed is justice denied."

Ashcroft's statements marked another escalation in the war of words between the Republican administration and the Democratic-controlled Senate over judicial nominations, which are shaping up as a key battleground for the two parties.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) and other leading Democrats, still smarting from Ashcroft's contentious confirmation in February, have vowed to block any judicial nominees seen as too ideologically extreme and accuse Republicans of hypocrisy for complaining about judicial nominations.

Leahy spokesman David Carle said that more than half of President Bill Clinton's nominees for circuit courts were not confirmed in the last two years of Republican control.

LIASSON: Right. And he might have the shortest stint, if he's -- if he's confirmed, on that Court of Appeals of anybody because he'll be on the top of the list to be elevated to the Supreme Court.

BARNES: He'd be a hard guy to block on any grounds other than the fact that he is a conservative.

SNOW: Let me ask you. This is a dumb question perhaps, but what's wrong with having that litmus test? I thought that's why you had presidents picking judges.

LIASSON: I think that's a good question, and that certainly is what Charles Schumer has suggested from the other point of view, is why not. Why shouldn't the Senate judge nominees on ideology? And if they don't like it, they should go vote against...

KONDRACK: Well, you can be sure that there would be -- that this judicial restraint litmus test would apply to a Supreme Court justice nominated by -- by George Bush. He -- it might not apply to a...

SNOW: Why? It didn't apply to his father.

LIASSON: Well -- well, wait a minute. He...

BARNES: No, no. This is wrong, though. Look, advise and consent does not mean we have -- we in the Senate have a right to appoint and decide whoever we want. If something...

LIASSON: Well, they have a right to vote against the judge if they want.

BARNES: It doesn't mean -- it does not give the Senate the power to reject all judges whose philosophy is not Tom Daschle's and Pat Leahy's. That's just not the way our system works, has ever worked, and to -- if you say no conservatives can be nominated...

LIASSON: Well, I don't think that's what they're saying. Look, they -- they're going to confirm conservatives.

"He knows about the delaying tactics of the past from his side of the aisle," Carle said of Ashcroft, a former Senate Republican. "Some Republican critics seem to be struggling mightily to keep straight faces while wrongly charging the Senate with delays."

Democrats also accuse the White House of causing its own delays by limiting the role of the ABA, which for half a century had secretly checked the backgrounds of potential federal judges before they were nominated. Bush officials stopped the practice, saying the group had a liberal bias in its grading system, but Democrats still rely on ABA grades issued after nominations.

In his first speech to the organization as attorney general, Ashcroft sidestepped the controversial move to end the ABA role. But, he said, "there are those who have called into doubt the impartiality of the ABA's judicial ratings." He cited a study alleging that Clinton nominees were 10 times more likely to get the group's highest rating than those in the first Bush administration.

In a separate speech yesterday in Chicago, Ashcroft urged Congress to close loopholes in laws that limit prosecutors' power to target money laundering and organized crime.

Ashcroft told an audience at a conference on organized crime that current laws severely limit the Justice Department's ability to confiscate large quantities of cash smuggled out of the country as part of the drug trade. The Justice Department is also considering asking Congress to expand the list of overseas crimes that can be prosecuted domestically if they involve bringing proceeds into the United States, he said.

Ashcroft Defends Bush To Lawyers

By Anne Gearan

Associated Press

Wednesday, August 8, 2001

Attorney General John Ashcroft said he is confident the American Bar Association will apply the same standards to its reviews of Bush administration nominees as it did when vetting Clinton nominees, and rate the Bush judges highly.

"I am heartened by the ABA's ratings thus far, and am confident that, judged by the same standards used to rate the last administration, the vast majority of President Bush's nominees will continue to receive" the ABA's highest "well-qualified" rating for judges, Ashcroft said Tuesday.

So far, the ABA has reviewed 17 of Bush's initial 44 choices for federal trial and appeals courts and found all either qualified or well-qualified.

Those reviews were done after the nominees' names were public, instead of beforehand as was done during the Democratic Clinton administration and for eight administrations before that.

Ashcroft addressed the first gathering of the American Bar Association since the Bush administration ended the 50-year policy of using the lawyer group to do behind-the-scenes investigations on White House choices for the federal bench.

Ashcroft did not discuss the White House decision, but did allude to a conservative suspicion that the ABA has a liberal bias and treats Republican judicial nominees more harshly.

"As you may know, there are some who have called into doubt the impartiality of the ABA's judicial ratings," Ashcroft said.

He cited a recent study by Northwestern University law professor James Lindgren, which claimed that the ABA was as much as 10 times more likely to give its highest ratings to Clinton administration choices than to nominees of President Bush's father.

"Professor Lindgren attributes this disparity to a political bias in favor of liberal judges," Ashcroft said, without offering his own view. "Undoubtedly, there are others who argue that no such bias exists. In any event, I think we can agree that no political bias should exist."

The Bush White House did not cite politics or ideology in booting the ABA in March, saying no outside group should have special control over a president's picks for lifetime judicial posts.

Ashcroft also used the speech to urge the Senate to speed up confirmation of judicial nominees. He noted that only one of 11 judges nominated to the U.S. circuit court this year has had a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"I know I don't need to tell you that judicial nominees mean delays in the time it takes to have one's case heard," Ashcroft said. "Justice delayed is justice denied."

Democrats have vowed to block any nominees seen as too extreme and point out that Republicans routinely blocked nominations when they controlled the Senate.

The ABA's weeklong annual meeting, which ends Wednesday, was dominated by discussion of a proposed overhaul to the 400,000-lawyer group's code of ethics.

The overhaul effort faltered Tuesday, as opponents argued to the ABA's governing body that it risked violating the trust between lawyers and clients.

Facing likely defeat in the ABA's policy-making House of Delegates, lawyers who backed the proposed changes withdrew the most contentious issue. The proposed change would have given lawyers more latitude to report wrongdoing by their clients, including fraudulent business deals and financial crimes.

The ABA was not expected to cast a final vote on the ethics rules until next year, but Tuesday's unexpectedly swift and decisive votes against key provisions may mean there is little left to fight about.

The ABA defeated another contested change that would have eliminated the veto power a client now holds over lawyers who want to switch sides in the middle of a dispute. The change would have allowed lawyers to join an opposing firm so long as the lawyer had nothing further to do with the case.

The delegates did back a proposed prohibition on lawyers having sex with their clients. Until now, lawyers and dentists were the only major professions without a strong policy against the practice, said Boston University law professor Nancy Moore, also a member of the panel that drew up the proposed changes.

The ABA's ethics recommendations are not law, but are used to write state laws governing lawyers.

Ashcroft Says Bush Judicial Picks Will Show 'Respect For The Law'

By Jess Bravin

The Wall Street Journal

Wednesday, August 8, 2001

Attorney General John Ashcroft told the American Bar Association that President Bush's judicial nominees would display a "respect for the law," unlike judges he didn't name, who he said "manufactured 'rights' " for criminals and issued other decisions "usurping the legislative function."

Separately, the ABA, meeting here for its annual convention, rejected further changes to its ethics guidelines that would allow lawyers to reveal clients they believe are intent on committing financial fraud.

The Bush administration's nominations, 44 of which are pending, are the first selected without the confidential screenings the ABA has provided presidents since Dwight D. Eisenhower. The administration ended the ABA screenings in March, after years of conservative complaints that the 400,000-member lawyers' organization preferred liberal judges.

The ABA nevertheless has continued to rate nominees by having a 15-member committee interview and gather information about them, before adopting a rating of "well-qualified," "qualified" or "not qualified." Senate Democrats, who control the fate of the nominees, have said they won't consider any Bush appointments that haven't been evaluated by the ABA.

In his speech Tuesday, Mr. Ashcroft said the group has screened 17 Bush nominations already. Most have been rated well-qualified and none less than qualified. "I am heartened by the ABA's ratings thus far, and am confident that, judged by the same standards used to rate the last administration, the vast majority of President Bush's nominees will continue to receive 'well qualified' ratings," he said. He asked the ABA to urge the Senate to quickly confirm the nominees.

Mr. Ashcroft also cited critics of the ABA screenings, referring to an opinion article in Monday's Wall Street Journal, which contended the group was harsher on federal appeals-court nominees of former President George H.W. Bush than they were on those of former President Clinton. In the piece, Northwestern University law professor James Lindgren said "Clinton nominees had more than 10 times better odds of getting the ABA's highest rating than similarly credentialed Bush appointees" and suggested the group isn't objective.

Mr. Ashcroft neither embraced nor rejected that view, but said, "I think we can agree that no political bias should exist." He said President Bush "has unequivocally rejected any notion of an issue-specific or political litmus test" for his nominees.

The ABA's incoming president, Robert E. Hirshon of Portland, Maine, said it was "absolutely wrong" to suggest that the lawyers' group played political favorites. He said of more than 2,000 judicial nominees evaluated since 1960, only 26 were rated not qualified -- and only three of those had been named by Republican presidents.

Martha W. Barnett of Tallahassee, Fla., the ABA's outgoing president, said that, during previous administrations, "in the rare situations where there were problems with a candidate, we came up with information that may have been valuable for the president in deciding whether to go forward" with a nomination.

On Monday, the ABA's governing House of Delegates endorsed a proposal to let lawyers reveal privileged information about a client "to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm." Tuesday, delegates turned down a similar provision involving financial fraud.

Disheartened proponents withdrew a related change in ethics rules that would have permitted disclosures to prevent, mitigate or rectify financial injuries, saying they may try again at an ABA meeting in February.

Delegates did approve a new guideline barring lawyers from having sexual relations with a client, except those sexual relationships that "predate the client-lawyer relationship." The ABA's guidelines are nonbinding, but often are followed by courts and legislatures.

Earlier in the day, Mr. Ashcroft proposed tightening money-laundering laws, such as allowing the government to seize shipments of "bulk cash" -- more than $10,000 -- without having to prove the smuggler derived the funds from a crime.

President Bush angered the American Bar Association in March when he put an end to its 50-year role in screening potential nominees to the federal bench.

On Tuesday, Attorney General John Ashcroft appeared at the bar association's annual convention here to spell out what Bush wants from nominees -- namely "judicial restraint."

Ashcroft's appearance "was his effort -- and ours -- to extend a hand across the political divide," said Martha Barnett, outgoing president of the group.

When Bush ended the quasi-official role of an ABA standing committee in vetting those being considered for judicial posts, he broke a tradition dating to 1950. Every president since then had considered the ABA's evaluations before announcing nominees.

But Bush was persuaded by conservatives who see a liberal bias in the bar association, especially after its evaluating panel split on ill-fated Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork in 1987.

Ashcroft, in his speech, broached the criticism by calling attention to a study underwritten by the Federalist Society, a conservative group concerned with legal issues. The study found that among nominees with similar legal experience, President Clinton's were seven times more likely to get the top rating of "well qualified" than those of the first President Bush.

"There are others who would argue that no such bias exists," Ashcroft told the lawyers. "In any event, I think we can agree that no political bias should exist."

Barnett pointed out after the speech that of the 2,000 potential nominees vetted by the ABA since the early 1960s, only 26 have received "not qualified" ratings, and 23 of them were chosen by Democratic presidents.

The ABA still evaluates nominees but only after their names are made public. Leaders in the Democrat-controlled Senate say they will not confirm a nominee without the ABA's input.

Ashcroft's appearance before the ABA seemed to be a sign of improving relations with the group, which represents 400,000 of the nation's lawyers. Even so, he was clear about the administration's policy on appointees.

"The president has unequivocally rejected any notion of an issue-specific or political litmus test and insists that the only value that his nominees share is a dedication to the rule of law and an understanding of the proper role of a federal judiciary," he said.

Meanwhile, the ABA on Tuesday set aside a discussion of how to handle attorney-client privilege. A faction of the group wanted to loosen guidelines on when an attorney can reveal a client's intent to commit a crime.

Lawyers are expected to report an imminent danger of death or serious injury. Some here hoped to allow lawyers to step forward when there's less clear-cut potential for danger, economic damage or other harm.

The group will likely revisit the issue at its meeting in Philadelphia in six months.

Leahy Plans Recess Hearing On Judicial Nominees

In a rare move, Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) will hold a confirmation hearing during the August recess for Bush administration judicial nominees.

Leahy's move is likely to hasten the process of confirming judges nominated by President Bush at a time when Republicans have questioned the slow pace of the confirmation process. Leahy signaled the move in an Aug. 2nd speech on the Senate floor in which he said:

"I am considering holding another judicial confirmation hearing in August, during the Senate recess. No such hearing was held during any of the last six years. If we proceed, it may be the first time a judicial confirmation hearing was held during the August recess."

Leahy is expected to hold the hearing on Aug. 27, his press secretary, David Carle, said Tuesday.

According to Carle, no such recess hearings had been held in the Judiciary Committee at least since 1989.

Leahy had consulted with ranking member Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), before going ahead with his plans, Carle said.

According to Senate Historian Richard Baker, only one member of the Judiciary Committee needs be present to conduct a hearing, although 10 senators are required to report a nomination.

Spokesmen for half-a-dozen Judiciary Committee members contacted Tuesday said they had not yet been informed of the Aug. 27 hearing and could not say whether their members would attend.

Leahy has been considering the unusual move for several reasons, Carle said, including the length of time it took for the Senate to approve an organizing resolution after Sen. Jim Jeffords' (I.-Vt.) defection gave Democrats control of the Senate.

"This is a highly unusual year," Carle said. "The Senate has changed hands three times. The Senate and the committee were only permitted to organize five weeks ago. So the confirmation process for judicial nominees has only been under way since mid-year."

Carle said the committee has already pursued "a brisk confirmation hearing schedule," including prompt consideration of Bush's nominees for the heads of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Drug Enforcement Administration and Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Bush sent another batch of judicial nominees to the Senate for consideration last week. Carle said the administration has now submitted 20 nominees for the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and 20 for various district courts.

Carle said it has yet to be determined which of these nominees will be included in the hearing this month.

The pace of nominations has proved to be a subject of contention between Democrats and Republicans.

After Sen. Larry Craig (R-Idaho) last week complained on the Senate floor about a nominee awaiting a Judiciary hearing, urging Leahy to act faster, Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) immediately fired back.

"I feel I may need to call an ambulance. I think I just bit off my tongue," Daschle said. "I will say in all sincerity that I think he just gave the speech that I have repeated probably 25 or 30 times over the last six years, verbatim. I can't tell you how many people languished for not days or weeks but years. But I have said on this floor repeatedly that we will not engage in payback."

On July 30, Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.) complained to reporters that the Senate at that time had only confirmed three federal judges. (Two more have since been confirmed.)

"And that's all," he said. "So I would hope that we could make some progress this week on the floor of the Senate on nominations and can get some commitments to make even a lot more progress when we come back in September."

But Leahy said some vacancies should have been filled in the past several years but were left open by the Republican-controlled Senate. He also said this year's pace of confirmations compares "most favorably" with the last six years.

On Friday, Assistant Minority Leader Don Nickles (R-Okla.) admitted the White House was partly to blame for delays in the confirmation of judges. "We've got a lot of judges that are waiting, a lot of U.S. attorneys, a lot of marshals that have not been confirmed, that need to be confirmed," Nickles said. "They should have been confirmed, frankly, in many cases by now, but we haven't got the nominations yet from the administration. So I'm not just faulting the Judiciary Committee, except for some of the circuit courts, they've been kind of slow on [the] circuit court."

Ashcroft Asks ABA For Help

By Al Swanson

United Press International

Tuesday, August 7, 2001

U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft Tuesday asked the American Bar Association for help to pressure the Senate to move forward and act on President Bush's 44 pending nominees for federal judgeships.

Ashcroft told the ABA House of Delegates "the American people deserve a federal judiciary operating at full strength and peak efficiency, providing equal access to speedy justice."

Ashcroft chided the Senate Judiciary Committee for holding just one hearing on 11 nominees for federal court vacancies made on May 9. Eight of them were nominated to vacancies that had been classified "judicial emergencies" by the Administrative Court of the United States.

"The administration is doing its part," he said. "Now the Senate and those organizations involved in the process, including the ABA, must join us in working for the prompt confirmation of the outstanding men and women the president has nominated to be federal judges."

The ABA has completed rating the qualifications of 17 of 44 Bush nominees to federal courts, finding them all either "qualified" or "well-qualified."

In March, Bush stopped using the ABA ratings of judicial nominees but the Senate, under Democratic leadership, has continued to use the evaluations.

He said delays in the Senate hearings had raised the specter of the old adage: "Justice delayed is justice denied."

Ashcroft called the Bush nominees models of judicial restraint.

"Judicial restraint means if the Constitution says you have a right to compensation when the government takes your property, then a judge cannot create exceptions for property that the government really doesn't want to pay for, by letting the government so heavily regulate the property as to make it worthless."

The nation's chief law enforcement officer said an independent federal judiciary, insulated from the whims of electoral politics, was essential to settling disputes between the legislative and the executive and maintaining respect for the law.

"Judges who exercise judicial restraint understand the limit of their power," he told the audience of lawyers.

"Judicial restraint means judges refusing to create on their own a criminal justice system that lets clearly guilty criminals off on a technicality."

Ashcroft, a lawyer and former Republican governor from Missouri, was a member of the Judiciary Committee and chairman of the Constitution subcommittee during his years in the Senate.

"Academic discussions of judicial activism and restraint have done little to enlighten the American public," he said. "The decisions we will ask our federal judges to make -- the issues we will expect them to weigh -- will affect each and every one of us in ways large and small."

Earlier, Ashcroft told law enforcement officers at a conference on organized crime in Chicago that Congress should close loopholes in the law to make it more difficult for drug dealers, terrorists and other criminals to launder money.

The Justice Department may recommend tightening federal laws to halt smuggling of large amounts of cash by making transporting more than $10,000 in cash proceeds from criminal acts across U.S. borders a federal offense. The money would be subject to confiscation.

Ashcroft Prods ABA To Quickly Vet Judge Nominees

U.S. Attorney General John D. Ashcroft Tuesday called for prompt Senate action on President Bush's judicial nominees and urged the American Bar Association to quickly and thoroughly review the nominees.

"So far the confirmation process has moved slowly," Ashcroft told the ABA's House of Delegates in the Grand Ballroom of the Hyatt Regency Hotel.

"The administration is doing its part. Now the Senate and those organizations involved in the process, including the ABA, must join us in working for the prompt confirmation of the outstanding men and women the president has nominated to the federal bench."

He said the Senate should approve all 44 of Bush's nominees by the end of the year.

Ashcroft made no mention of the Bush administration's decision only five months ago to end the ABA's half-century role of advance vetting of prospective federal judges before the president makes the nominations public.

Since Bush took that action, Democratic senators have asked the ABA to evaluate judicial nominees before the U.S. Senate acts on them.

In his speech, Ashcroft also spoke out against judicial activism and against judges who release "clearly guilty criminals" on technicalities. This, he said, leads to increased crime.

The House of Delegates applauded one remark, when Ashcroft said "I think we can agree that no political bias should exist" in the nomination and confirmation of judges.

"As you know," Ashcroft told the delegates, "there are some who have called into doubt the impartiality of the ABA's judicial ratings."

The attorney general quoted a study by Northwestern University law Professor James Lindgren, who found that President Bill Clinton's judicial nominees "had more than 10 times better odds of getting the ABA's highest rating than similar credentialed former-President Bush's appointees."

"Professor Lindgren attributes this disparity to a political bias in favor of liberal judges," Ashcroft told the ABA delegates.

"Undoubtedly," Ashcroft added, "there are others who argue that no such bias exists. In any event, I think we can agree that no political bias should exist."

He said he was "heartened by the ABA's ratings thus far" of Bush's nominees and was "confident that, judged by the same standards used to rate the last administration, the vast majority of President Bush's nominees will continue to receive 'well qualified' ratings."

The ABA has reviewed 17 of Bush's judicial nominees and "rated every one of them qualified.... In fact, you have rated 70 per cent of these candidates 'well qualified,' the ABA's highest rating," the attorney general said.

"Currently, there is a serious number of vacancies on the federal courts, 108 vacancies out of 862 positions," Ashcroft said. "More than 12 per cent of the court is vacant. President Bush has recognized the urgency of this problem and has made it one of his top priorities. He has nominated judges at a record pace, 44 judicial candidates so far this year."

By comparison, Ashcroft said, President Ronald Reagan had made 13 judicial nominations before the end of August 1981; George H.W. Bush had made eight such nominations by the end of August 1989; and Clinton had made 13 before the end of August 1993.

Ashcroft said that in the first year of each of the past three presidential administrations, "all but one of the judicial nominees who were nominated before the end of the August recess were confirmed in the first year of the presidency.

"The one nominee who was not confirmed was rated 'not qualified' by the ABA. Consistent with that history, the Senate should move forward and act on all 44 of President Bush's nominations ... this year."

Ashcroft noted that the Senate has a long way to go. He said Bush announced 11 judicial nominations on May 9, "two months before Presidents Reagan or Clinton made their first nominations." Eight of those 11 were nominated to judicial vacancies classified as "judicial emergencies" by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts, Ashcroft said.

The ABA found all of the first 11 nominations "to be either qualified or well qualified for judicial office ... yet only one of those 11 nominees has received a hearing in the Senate Judiciary Committee," the attorney general said.

He commended the Senate for acting promptly on non-judicial appointments, including in the last two weeks a new commissioner of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, a new head of the Drug Enforcement Administration, and a new FBI director.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vermont, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, understands the urgency of acting on Bush's judicial nominees, said Ashcroft. He told the delegates, "I ask you to help him in ensuring that the rest of the Senate places as high a priority on these nominations as does the president."

Back in March, White House Counsel Al Gonzales pointed out that the ABA has done advocacy work on certain public policies such as support for abortion and a call for a death penalty moratorium. Gonzales said that, in that light, the ABA should not have "a preferential arrangement" whereby it got first crack at examining potential judicial nominees.

On the issue of judicial activism, Ashcroft quoted Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter as saying, "The highest exercise of judicial duty is to subordinate one's personal will and one's private views to the law."

Judicial activism, said Ashcroft, deprives the voters of recourse to their legislature for policy decisions.

McConnell Says East Kentucky Judges Will Prove Capable

The three nominees for federal judgeships in eastern Kentucky will prove capable jurists over the years, Sen. Mitch McConnell said Wednesday, though he acknowledged he does not know one of the nominees.

McConnell also dismissed any notion that personal relationships influenced the choices of any of the nominees. "That happens sometimes," McConnell said.

David Bunning, the son of U.S. Sen. Jim Bunning, is one of the nominees. Another is Karen Caldwell, a former U.S. Attorney for the eastern district who once dated McConnell. The third nominee is Danny Reeves, a Lexington lawyer.

McConnell said he personally knows only two of the nominees and Bunning knows only two. He refused to elaborate.

"You've got to pick people somehow," McConnell told the Louisville Forum. "I think we did a good job and I think the people in eastern Kentucky will discover that over the years."

If confirmed, federal judges hold lifetime jobs and can be removed only by impeachment in the Congress.

There has been some muted criticism of the nominees because they lack eastern Kentucky connections. The nominations by President Bush, which have yet to be considered by the Senate are to fill two vacancies and a new judgeship, including seats in London and Pikeville.

Bunning's qualifications have been questioned because he has been practicing law for only 10 years, all as an assistant prosecutor in the U.S. Attorney's office. The American Bar Association guidelines generally suggest a minimum of 12 years experience for a federal judge.

McConnell, who has been in the Senate for 17 years and will be running for re-election in 2002, fielded questions from forum members on a range of topics, from missile defense to a separate state for Palestinians.

He answered pointedly on a couple of inquiries, especially one about his own legislative record.

McConnell said a question posed about what bills he has sponsored in three terms sounded like it came from an opponent, though the forum is officially neutral and nonpartisan.

McConnell said he has been primary sponsor on numerous important items, mostly appropriations initiatives in the area of foreign aid. McConnell said he would answer the question more fully during his campaign.

On the topic of drilling for oil in the Alaskan wilderness, McConnell said in some respects the issue boiled down to driving habits. McConnell said more people would be killed if fewer people drove large sport utility vehicles.

"Who's going to be willing to sacrifice a member of their family by getting into a smaller car?" McConnell wondered.

on what the meaning of the word "litmus" is because, clearly, George Bush and John Ashcroft have an idea.

He says, "We're not going to make any -- we're not going to have any political litmus tests," and I even think he said ideological litmus tests. On the other hand, they do have a judicial litmus test, and that is restraint...

LIASSON: Right.

KONDRACK: ... you know, that you should not -- that a judge should not make law, should leave the process to the legislature and all that. Now he did -- what he did not say -- he did not point at the ABA and accuse them of -- of having a political bias, which this Northwestern University professor who he cited actually found, that the ABA was 10 times more likely to approve a judge nominated by Bill Clinton than George Bush's father.

Ashcroft Pushes Senate On Judicial Nominees; Speech Fuels Battle Over Confirmations

By Dan Eggen

The Washington Post

Wednesday, August 8, 2001

Attorney General John D. Ashcroft urged the Senate yesterday to speed up confirmation of the Bush administration's nominees for the federal bench, complaining that the "process has moved slowly" and is contributing to backlogs in the federal courts.

In a speech to the American Bar Association in Chicago, Ashcroft said that only one of 11 judges nominated to U.S. circuit courts this year has had a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. Eight of those positions have been classified as "judicial emergencies" because they have stood vacant for so long, he said.

"I know I don't need to tell you that judicial vacancies mean delays in the time it takes to have one's case heard," Ashcroft said at the ABA's annual conference. "Justice delayed is justice denied."

Ashcroft's statements marked another escalation in the war of words between the Republican administration and the Democratic-controlled Senate over judicial nominations, which are shaping up as a key battleground for the two parties.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.) and other leading Democrats, still smarting from Ashcroft's contentious confirmation in February, have vowed to block any judicial nominees seen as too ideologically extreme and accuse Republicans of hypocrisy for complaining about judicial nominations.

Leahy spokesman David Carle said that more than half of President Bill Clinton's nominees for circuit courts were not confirmed in the last two years of Republican control.

LIASSON: Right. And he might have the shortest stint, if he's -- if he's confirmed, on that Court of Appeals of anybody because he'll be on the top of the list to be elevated to the Supreme Court.

BARNES: He'd be a hard guy to block on any grounds other than the fact that he is a conservative.

SNOW: Let me ask you. This is a dumb question perhaps, but what's wrong with having that litmus test? I thought that's why you had presidents picking judges.

LIASSON: I think that's a good question, and that certainly is what Charles Schumer has suggested from the other point of view, is why not. Why shouldn't the Senate judge nominees on ideology? And if they don't like it, they should go vote against...

KONDRACK: Well, you can be sure that there would be -- that this judicial restraint litmus test would apply to a Supreme Court justice nominated by -- by George Bush. He -- it might not apply to a...

SNOW: Why? It didn't apply to his father.

LIASSON: Well -- well, wait a minute. He...

BARNES: No, no. This is wrong, though. Look, advise and consent does not mean we have -- we in the Senate have a right to appoint and decide whoever we want. If something...

LIASSON: Well, they have a right to vote against the judge if they want.

BARNES: It doesn't mean -- it does not give the Senate the power to reject all judges whose philosophy is not Tom Daschle's and Pat Leahy's. That's just not the way our system works, has ever worked, and to -- if you say no conservatives can be nominated...

LIASSON: Well, I don't think that's what they're saying. Look, they -- they're going to confirm conservatives.

"He knows about the delaying tactics of the past from his side of the aisle," Carle said of Ashcroft, a former Senate Republican. "Some Republican critics seem to be struggling mightily to keep straight faces while wrongly charging the Senate with delays."

Democrats also accuse the White House of causing its own delays by limiting the role of the ABA, which for half a century had secretly checked the backgrounds of potential federal judges before they were nominated. Bush officials stopped the practice, saying the group had a liberal bias in its grading system, but Democrats still rely on ABA grades issued after nominations.

In his first speech to the organization as attorney general, Ashcroft sidestepped the controversial move to end the ABA role. But, he said, "there are those who have called into doubt the impartiality of the ABA's judicial ratings." He cited a study alleging that Clinton nominees were 10 times more likely to get the group's highest rating than those in the first Bush administration.

In a separate speech yesterday in Chicago, Ashcroft urged Congress to close loopholes in laws that limit prosecutors' power to target money laundering and organized crime.

Ashcroft told an audience at a conference on organized crime that current laws severely limit the Justice Department's ability to confiscate large quantities of cash smuggled out of the country as part of the drug trade. The Justice Department is also considering asking Congress to expand the list of overseas crimes that can be prosecuted domestically if they involve bringing proceeds into the United States, he said.

Ashcroft Defends Bush To Lawyers

By Anne Gearan

Associated Press

Wednesday, August 8, 2001

Attorney General John Ashcroft said he is confident the American Bar Association will apply the same standards to its reviews of Bush administration nominees as it did when vetting Clinton nominees, and rate the Bush judges highly.

standards used to rate the last administration, the vast majority of President Bush's nominees will continue to receive" the ABA's highest "well-qualified" rating for judges, Ashcroft said Tuesday.

So far, the ABA has reviewed 17 of Bush's initial 44 choices for federal trial and appeals courts and found all either qualified or well-qualified.

Those reviews were done after the nominees' names were public, instead of beforehand as was done during the Democratic Clinton administration and for eight administrations before that.

Ashcroft addressed the first gathering of the American Bar Association since the Bush administration ended the 50-year policy of using the lawyer group to do behind-the-scenes investigations on White House choices for the federal bench.

Ashcroft did not discuss the White House decision, but did allude to a conservative suspicion that the ABA has a liberal bias and treats Republican judicial nominees more harshly.

"As you may know, there are some who have called into doubt the impartiality of the ABA's judicial ratings," Ashcroft said.

He cited a recent study by Northwestern University law professor James Lindgren, which claimed that the ABA was as much as 10 times more likely to give its highest ratings to Clinton administration choices than to nominees of President Bush's father.

"Professor Lindgren attributes this disparity to a political bias in favor of liberal judges," Ashcroft said, without offering his own view. "Undoubtedly, there are others who argue that no such bias exists. In any event, I think we can agree that no political bias should exist."

The Bush White House did not cite politics or ideology in booting the ABA in March, saying no outside group should have special control over a president's picks for lifetime judicial posts.

Ashcroft also used the speech to urge the Senate to speed up confirmation of judicial nominees. He noted that only one of 11 judges nominated to the U.S. circuit court this year has had a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"I know I don't need to tell you that judicial nominees mean delays in the time it takes to have one's case heard," Ashcroft said. "Justice delayed is justice denied."

Democrats have vowed to block any nominees seen as too extreme and point out that Republicans routinely blocked nominations when they controlled the Senate.

The ABA's weeklong annual meeting, which ends Wednesday, was dominated by discussion of a proposed overhaul to the 400,000-lawyer group's code of ethics.

The overhaul effort faltered Tuesday, as opponents argued to the ABA's governing body that it risked violating the trust between lawyers and clients.

Facing likely defeat in the ABA's policy-making House of Delegates, lawyers who backed the proposed changes withdrew the most contentious issue. The proposed change would have given lawyers more latitude to report wrongdoing by their clients, including fraudulent business deals and financial crimes.

The ABA was not expected to cast a final vote on the ethics rules until next year, but Tuesday's unexpectedly swift and decisive votes against key provisions may mean there is little left to fight about.

The ABA defeated another contested change that would have eliminated the veto power a client now holds over lawyers who want to switch sides in the middle of a dispute. The change would have allowed lawyers to join an opposing firm so long as the lawyer had nothing further to do with the case.

The delegates did back a proposed prohibition on lawyers having sex with their clients. Until now, lawyers and dentists were the only major professions without a strong policy against the practice, said Boston University law professor Nancy Moore, also a member of the panel that drew up the proposed changes.

The ABA's ethics recommendations are not law, but are used to write state laws governing lawyers.

Ashcroft Says Bush Judicial Picks Will Show 'Respect For The Law'

By Jess Bravin
The Wall Street Journal
Wednesday, August 8, 2001

Attorney General John Ashcroft told the American Bar Association that President Bush's judicial nominees would display a "respect for the law," unlike judges he didn't name, who he said "manufactured 'rights' " for criminals and issued other decisions "usurping the legislative function."

Separately, the ABA, meeting here for its annual convention, rejected further changes to its ethics guidelines that would allow lawyers to reveal clients they believe are intent on committing financial fraud.

The Bush administration's nominations, 44 of which are pending, are the first selected without the confidential screenings the ABA has provided presidents since Dwight D. Eisenhower. The administration ended the ABA screenings in March, after years of conservative complaints that the 400,000-member lawyers' organization preferred liberal judges.

The ABA nevertheless has continued to rate nominees by having a 15-member committee interview and gather information about them, before adopting a rating of "well-qualified," "qualified" or "not qualified." Senate Democrats, who control the fate of the nominees, have said they won't consider any Bush appointments that haven't been evaluated by the ABA.

In his speech Tuesday, Mr. Ashcroft said the group has screened 17 Bush nominations already. Most have been rated well-qualified and none less than qualified. "I am heartened by the ABA's ratings thus far, and am confident that, judged by the same standards used to rate the last administration, the vast majority of President Bush's nominees will continue to receive 'well qualified' ratings," he said. He asked the ABA to urge the Senate to quickly confirm the nominees.

Mr. Ashcroft also cited critics of the ABA screenings, referring to an opinion article in Monday's Wall Street Journal, which contended the group was harsher on federal appeals-court nominees of former President George H.W. Bush than they were on those of former President Clinton. In the piece, Northwestern University law professor James Lindgren said "Clinton nominees had more than 10 times better odds of getting the ABA's highest rating than similarly credentialed Bush appointees" and suggested the group isn't objective.

Mr. Ashcroft neither embraced nor rejected that view, but said, "I think we can agree that no political bias should exist." He said President Bush "has unequivocally rejected any notion of an issue-specific or political litmus test" for his nominees.

The ABA's incoming president, Robert E. Hirshon of Portland, Maine, said it was "absolutely wrong" to suggest that the lawyers' group played political favorites. He said of more than 2,000 judicial nominees evaluated since 1960, only 26 were rated not qualified -- and only three of those had been named by Republican presidents.

Martha W. Barnett of Tallahassee, Fla., the ABA's outgoing president, said that, during previous administrations, "in the rare situations where there were problems with a candidate, we came up with information that may have been valuable for the president in deciding whether to go forward" with a nomination.

On Monday, the ABA's governing House of Delegates endorsed a proposal to let lawyers reveal privileged information about a client "to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm." Tuesday, delegates turned down a similar provision involving financial fraud.

Disheartened proponents withdrew a related change in ethics rules that would have permitted disclosures to prevent, mitigate or rectify financial injuries, saying they may try again at an ABA meeting in February.

Delegates did approve a new guideline barring lawyers from having sexual relations with a client, except those sexual relationships that "predate the client-lawyer relationship." The ABA's guidelines are nonbinding, but often are followed by courts and legislatures.

Earlier in the day, Mr. Ashcroft proposed tightening money-laundering laws, such as allowing the government to seize shipments of "bulk cash" -- more than $10,000 -- without having to prove the smuggler derived the funds from a crime.

President Bush angered the American Bar Association in March when he put an end to its 50-year role in screening potential nominees to the federal bench.

On Tuesday, Attorney General John Ashcroft appeared at the bar association's annual convention here to spell out what Bush wants from nominees -- namely "judicial restraint."

Ashcroft's appearance "was his effort -- and ours -- to extend a hand across the political divide," said Martha Barnett, outgoing president of the group.

When Bush ended the quasi-official role of an ABA standing committee in vetting those being considered for judicial posts, he broke a tradition dating to 1950. Every president since then had considered the ABA's evaluations before announcing nominees.

But Bush was persuaded by conservatives who see a liberal bias in the bar association, especially after its evaluating panel split on ill-fated Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork in 1987.

Ashcroft, in his speech, broached the criticism by calling attention to a study underwritten by the Federalist Society, a conservative group concerned with legal issues. The study found that among nominees with similar legal experience, President Clinton's were seven times more likely to get the top rating of "well qualified" than those of the first President Bush.

"There are others who would argue that no such bias exists," Ashcroft told the lawyers. "In any event, I think we can agree that no political bias should exist."

Barnett pointed out after the speech that of the 2,000 potential nominees vetted by the ABA since the early 1960s, only 26 have received "not qualified" ratings, and 23 of them were chosen by Democratic presidents.

The ABA still evaluates nominees but only after their names are made public. Leaders in the Democrat-controlled Senate say they will not confirm a nominee without the ABA's input.

Ashcroft's appearance before the ABA seemed to be a sign of improving relations with the group, which represents 400,000 of the nation's lawyers. Even so, he was clear about the administration's policy on appointees.

"The president has unequivocally rejected any notion of an issue-specific or political litmus test and insists that the only value that his nominees share is a dedication to the rule of law and an understanding of the proper role of a federal judiciary," he said.

Meanwhile, the ABA on Tuesday set aside a discussion of how to handle attorney-client privilege. A faction of the group wanted to loosen guidelines on when an attorney can reveal a client's intent to commit a crime.

Lawyers are expected to report an imminent danger of death or serious injury. Some here hoped to allow lawyers to step forward when there's less clear-cut potential for danger, economic damage or other harm.

The group will likely revisit the issue at its meeting in Philadelphia in six months.

Leahy Plans Recess Hearing On Judicial Nominees

By Noelle Straub

The Hill

Wednesday, August 8, 2001

In a rare move, Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) will hold a confirmation hearing during the August recess for Bush administration judicial nominees.

Leahy's move is likely to hasten the process of confirming judges nominated by President Bush at a time when Republicans have questioned the slow pace of the confirmation process. Leahy signaled the move in an Aug. 2nd speech on the Senate floor in which he said:

We have to be very careful on this point. Our question must be in the context of OGE's additional questions and how the "process" should be utilized to assure ourselves that there is no problem; it cannot appear that we have a problem with their definition as it applies to reported on facts or even facts that we would be likely to obtain, because to do so would mean that a violation could hang in the balance -- this alone would warrant a referral.

While I recognize times and circumstances have changed since the previous Bush Administration, the policy back then was that since the President is "president" 24/7 (irrespective of the type of event - political or official), his staff were treated the same. Schedule C ("Hatched") were/are a different story.

Obviously at some point when the political travel increases we'll move some of our fulltime advance staff to a political payroll.

Subject: Karl Rove Request

We received an OA65 from Karl Rove's assistant on Tuesday requesting that his contacts be exported from a Lotus Notes database that either Scott Bussey or Marvin Miller set up. They asked that it be exported to a spreadsheet or tabular text file. NG came back and said it would take 3 days to write a script to do that and asked for more information about the data format desired.

I just received a phone call from a Scott Sciarrino (SSciarrino@USTR.GOV), who works at USTR and has been assisting Karl Rove for whatever reason. He said that the data should be in comma separated text format and that the data was to be imported into Mr. Rove's Outlook on his personally owned Macintosh and also imported onto his personally owned PalmPilot. He said it would be a one-time export.

This is totally out of scope for tasks that NG does, but knowing who requested it, someone above me needs to rule on this one and decide if we should assist him.

I'll be out of the office until next Wednesday, but Jennifer's familiar with the request and the Magic ticket is #8639.

Thanks.

Praise For President Bush's Thoughtful, Principled Solution On Embryonic Stem Cell Research Funding

National Institutes Of Health, Acting Director Dr. Ruth Kirschstein: "We are pleased with the President's decision to allow the use of Federal funds for important basic research on human embryonic stem cells. The approach he has outlined is sound, and we understand the President's clear desire to move forward with care. Using the more than 60 existing cell lines from around the world, many more researchers will now be able to explore the potential of human embryonic stem cells, in addition to the extensive work already sponsored by NIH using human adult stem cells. We believe this combined research has high potential both for opening new doors in basic scientific understanding and for discovery of new treatments for some of our most devastating diseases." (National Institutes Of Health, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

American Cancer Society: "The Society believes that such research holds extraordinary potential in the fight against a variety of life-threatening diseases currently afflicting an estimated 140 million Americans. . . . The American Cancer Society commends the Administration for allowing this vital scientific research to proceed - even in a limited way." (American Cancer Society Website, www2.cancer.org, August 10, 2001)

Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation International, Peter Van Etten, President And Chief Operating Officer: "We applaud the president for supporting embryonic stem cell research and for recognizing the importance this research holds to cure millions of Americans suffering from life-threatening illnesses." The Washington Post, August 10, 2001; Katharine Q. Seelye, "Bush Approves Limited Stem Cell Test Funding," The New York Times, August 9, 2001)

Biotechnology Industry Organization, President Carl B. Feldbaum: "We appreciate the difficult decision President Bush faced regarding federal funding of stem cell research, and we are pleased that the President determined the need for this research to continue. This was a good, clear, balanced outcome. As the President pointed out, advances in stem cell research could impact the lives of millions of desperately ill Americans who suffer from conditions for which there are no treatments, including Alzheimer's and Parkinson's diseases, various cancers, diabetes and spinal cord injuries. The President's decision is a major step forward for patients and the biotechnology industry. Among all the conditions that President Bush placed on this research with which we wholeheartedly agree, we have one reservation, which we believe will be worked out in time. Placing a limit on the number of cell lines available for this research may place roadblocks to medical progress, some of which may take years to overcome. . . . Again, we are very pleased with President Bush's concern for both the need for this critical research to continue, and for the ethical questions involved to be continuously and thoughtfully considered." (Biotechnology Industry Organization, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

Timothy McCaffrey, Associate Professor of Biochemistry and Molecular Biology, George Washington University Medical Center: "Considering the difficult positions he had to weigh, it appears to be quite a fair decision. Obviously, as a scientist, you want as few restrictions on your work as possible. But this doesn't disable the field at all. Compared with being unable to use federal funds, period, for stem cell research, this is a big step forward." (Carl T. Hall, "Scientists Worry How Policy Affects Them," The San Francisco Chronicle, August 10, 2001)

LeRoy Walters, Bioethicist, Georgetown University: "I think there will be a momentum effect. The pace of discovery will be accelerated and there may be the side benefit that some discoveries may be more available to researchers nationwide." (Sheryl Gay Stolberg, "The President's Decision: A Question Of Research," The New York Times, August 10, 2001)

Robert Lanza, Vice President of Medical and Scientific Development, Advanced Cell Technology in Worcester, Massachusetts: “. . . An important milestone in medical history. Up until now there was this black cloud that lingered over one of the most promising areas of biomedical research this century. This decision is going to spur a medical revolution as important as antibiotics and vaccines.” (Anne E. Kornblut, and Mary Leonard, “A Limited OK On Stem-Cell Funds Bush Cites ‘Promise’ And ‘Peril,’ Allows Existing-Embryo Research,” The Boston Globe, August 10, 2001)

Jeffrey T. Kahn, Director, Center for Bioethics at the University of Minnesota: “Had he banned this, all the research would have gone on at the private level, away from any oversight. If people take the federal money, they have to follow the federal rules.” (David M. Shribman, “A Limited OK On Stem-Cell Funds Cautious Step Taken Toward A New World,” The Boston Globe, August 10, 2001)

Doug Melton, Stem Cell Researcher, Harvard University: “If there are 60 lines that are robust, grow well and have the properties of human embryonic cell lines, that’s news to me and it is good news.” (Sheryl Gay Stolberg, “The President’s Decision: A Question Of Research,” The New York Times, August 10, 2001)

Dr. John Mendelsohn, President, University of Texas M. D. Anderson Cancer Center: “It’s hard to crystal-ball this. I believe President Bush made the important decision, which is to go forward.” (Sheryl Gay Stolberg, “The President’s Decision: A Question Of Research,” The New York Times, August 10, 2001)

Dr. John McDonald, Neuroscientist, Washington University (St. Louis): “He said he intends to apply soon for funds for research on human embryonic stem cells. McDonald is trying to find a way to heal injured spinal cords with stem cells. He said that he is pleased that some research will go forward. ‘I’m very optimistic, and I think it’s a good first step,’ McDonald said.” (Tina Hesman, “Stem Cell Decision Brings Support And Criticism,” St. Louis Post-Dispatch, August 10, 2001)

Massachusetts Catholic Conference: “The Announcement by President Bush rejecting the use of federal funds for research using stem cells obtained through the destruction of human embryos deserves the highest praise. The President demonstrated the utmost in courage by refusing to compel millions of taxpayers against their conscience to promote the killing of human life for utilitarian purposes.

“President Bush had an opportunity to stand up for the dignity and inviolability of innocent human life and came through on the critical issues of cloning and embryo-destroying research. Now we as a country can focus on positive solutions to the problems of disease and illness that involve the use of adult stem cells and not the cannibalism of human life itself.

“While the President’s decision to permit research funding on sixty cell lines established from the previous destruction of embryos is disturbing, this does not diminish the significance of the President’s refusal to fund research involving the future destruction of embryos.

“The President’s announcement was clear, understandable, and well-reasoned. The public debate over this issue has been ably advanced as a result of his efforts tonight.”

The Massachusetts Catholic Conference is the public policy office of the Roman Catholic Church in the Commonwealth, representing the Archdiocese of Boston and the Dioceses of Springfield, Worcester, and Fall River.

Reverend Jerry Falwell: “Fully believing President Bush and his commitment to the sanctity of life, I anticipated a statement that would maintain his integrity in this matter, however, only Solomon could have improved on the what the President did and said. He clearly maintained his integrity regarding the protection of unborn life. He also manifested his concern for the health and welfare of all Americans by allowing science to proceed unfettered but within reasonable moral boundaries. This was George W. Bush's finest hour thus far." (Dr. Jerry Falwell, Statement, August 9, 2001)

Reverend Jerry Falwell: "I've never been prouder of George W. Bush than I am right now. ... When I heard his words carefully and sincerely and with anguish spoken, when he finished, I said, the guy has not violated one tenet of his convictions in the pro-life position. . . . When I saw George Bush tonight and listened to him, I thought for a moment I was watching and listening [to] Ronald Reagan, and I cheered and said, 'God bless you, George Bush. Stay with it'" (Fox's "The Edge," August 9, 2001)

Focus On The Family, Dr. James Dobson: "Pro-life leaders were surprised - and largely pleased - with the thrust of Bush's announcement. Dr. James Dobson, president of Focus on the Family, told CNN's Larry King that the decision is a defining moment for Bush's presidency. 'From our perspective he didn't call for federal funds to be expended to take human life to kill those little embryos. (Bob Ditmer, Pete Winn and Karla Dial, "President Approves Limited Stem Cell Funding," In Focus, August 9, 2001)

Focus On The Family, Dr. James Dobson: "...I give the president's decision generally a thumbs-up. There are still some aspects to it that we want to look at, but I think he found a good solution for this stage." (CNN's "Larry King Live," August 9, 2001)

Christian Medical Society, Executive Director David Stevens: "Like many who heard the president's decision last night, I came away both encouraged and very concerned. I was encouraged to see our president drawing from the wisdom from a wide range of society, from the scientific and religious communities, as well as from everyday people. I was also encouraged to hear him commit to funding the tremendous promise of adult stem cell research, an alternative that may enable us to solve the problems of diabetes, Parkinson's disease, and a host of other chronic diseases. I was also encouraged to hear the formation of an advisory board that will continue to examine the important ethical aspects, as well as scientific progress, of stem cell research." (Christian Medical Society, Press Conference, August 10, 2001)

Pat Robertson's American Center for Law and Justice, Chief Counsel Jay Sekulow: "The American Center for Law and Justice, an international public interest law firm and educational organization, said President Bush's decision to prohibit the use of federal funds to destroy human embryos to obtain stem cells for research is the 'correct' decision on this critical issue. 'We are extremely pleased that the President has refused to permit the use of federal funds to be used to destroy human embryos and therefore human life,' said Jay Sekulow, Chief Counsel of the ACLJ. 'It is clear the President has given this issue very serious thought and consideration. And while all Americans hope that medical and scientific research result in new discoveries that provide cures for numerous maladies, the President also made it clear that he considers human embryos to be human life - sacred life - that must be protected. The President said 'no' to the most troubling aspect of this issue - the use of federal funds to destroy human embryos - to destroy human life. The President has reached the correct decision concerning one of the most serious ethical and moral issues of our day.'" (American Center For Law And Justice, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

National Right To Life Applauds President's Decision On Embryo-Destructive Stem Cell Research: "In an address to the nation this evening, President Bush announced that he would not allow federal funding of stem cell research that involves the killing of any more human embryos. 'We are delighted that President Bush's decision prevents the federal government from becoming a party to any further killing of human embryos for medical experimentation,' stated Laura Echevarria, director of Media Relations for the National Right to Life Committee. 'While National Right to Life mourns the loss of life for those embryos from whom stem cell lines have already been derived, nothing the National Right to Life Committee or President Bush can do can restore the lives of those embryos who have already died,' stated Ms. Echevarria. President Bush's decision will have no negative impact on ethical research involving stem cells derived from sources such as adult fat, blood, and bone marrow, as well as placentas and umbilical cord blood. Adult stem cells have been shown to be dramatically more effective, and have already been used to help patients. 'More and more people with disabling and chronic conditions are being helped by adult stem cell research,' stated Ms. Echevarria. According to a June (June 1-5, 2001) International Communications Research poll, 67 percent of those polled prefer having their tax dollars used for stem cell research 'using adult stem cells and other alternatives . . .' Only 18 percent favored federal support of research that included experiments which 'require destroying human embryos.' Moreover, instead of destroying human embryos through medical research, they may be adopted by parents. Indeed the demand for their adoption exceeds the number of embryos who could be adopted. 'We strongly commend the President's strong opposition to all human cloning and to the special creation of human embryos for research,' said NRLC Legislative Director Douglas Johnson. Last month a Massachusetts firm, Advanced Cell Technology, announced that it will soon begin attempting to create cloned human embryos for the purpose of harvesting their stem cells or using them in other lethal research (a practice referred to by the bio-tech industry as 'therapeutic cloning'). On July 31, the House of Representatives voted to ban all human cloning, including the creation of cloned embryos, 265-162. The legislation is now awaiting action in the Senate. President Bush has endorsed the bill. 'The Senate must act immediately to prevent the start-up of cloned human embryo farms in the United States,' Johnson said." (National Right To Life Committee, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

EDITORIALS:

The Dallas Morning News: "Mr. Bush supports scientific research. He has called for almost a 14 percent increase in the budget of the National Institutes of Health, to bring its fiscal 2002 budget to $23 billion. And the institutes' support for research on adult stem cells has been significant. What the president's decision means is that federal efforts will be able to be focused on more areas of promising stem cell research, including embryonic cells as well as those harvested from umbilical cord blood, placental tissue, adult and even newly engineered cells. Federal supervision and bio-ethical safeguards will be part of this revolutionary new area of science. The president should be commended for taking a conscientious, careful approach to the issue." (Editorial, "Stem Cells," Dallas Morning News, August 10, 2001)

St. Louis Post-Dispatch: "After months of deliberation, President George W. Bush made a landmark decision on embryonic stem cell research that reflected the conscience of a moral nation. Drawing the difficult distinction between ethics and religion, Mr. Bush announced that the government would fund promising research on stem cells derived from frozen human embryos earmarked for destruction in fertility clinics. It was an incomprehensibly far-reaching verdict for any one person to undertake, especially a pro-life, Republican president leery of offending Catholics -- a swing voting bloc that may hold the key to his re-election. . . . For so many who are ailing and holding out hope, it does not matter why Mr. Bush made his decision. But if the president wants to be more responsive to the needs and genuine suffering of everyday citizens, he has made an excellent start." (Editorial, "Stem Cell Research," St. Louis Post-Dispatch, August 10, 2001)

The Boston Herald: "With his announcement last night President Bush has laid the groundwork for enormous advances in medical research and given real meaning to his campaign pledge to govern as a 'compassionate conservative.' . . . In approving the use of federal funds for stem cell research and on setting reasonable limits for the use of embryos in that research, Bush has found that middle ground with which most Americans will feel comfortable and comforted. Comfortable because few people see anything terribly wrong in the scientific use of portions of embryos (created in clinics for in vitro fertilization) that would be destroyed anyway. And comforted because if it is in the power of modern medicine to help those with Parkinson's disease, diabetes, Alzheimer's or spinal cord injuries, then we have a responsibility to do so. . . . George W. Bush last night committed this nation to just such a policy. It's the right one." (Editorial, "Bush Course Best On Stem Cell Work," The Boston Herald, August 10, 2001)

The Chicago Tribune: "The Tribune has advocated funding for research on stem cells extracted from a limited number of embryos created for the purpose of in vitro fertilization, and destined to be discarded. The decision Bush announced Wednesday night would fund research on some 60 existing cell lines, though not on new lines from additional embryos. . . . Bush's decision, and his admonition that "we must proceed with great care," reflect a similar uneasiness. But while his limits may be too strict, the president has in fact moved in the correct direction. If federally funded research begins to yield promising results, the limits Bush articulated could change." (Editorial, "Stem Cells And Caution," The Chicago Tribune, August 10, 2001)

USA Today: "Bush, in a televised address, did not go as far as many scientists would like, or as far as eventually will be necessary for effective research and treatment. He limited research to just 60 lines of stem cells from embryos that have already been destroyed. But he nevertheless went far enough to fuel Wasson's hopes and those of millions of others. It also is a reasonable way, at least for now, to set limits on a fast-moving field in which scientists' abilities have outpaced the public's ethical consensus. . . . Regardless, his change of heart should not be seen as a sign of weakness or opportunism, but as a difficult balance between personal beliefs and the national interest. . . . Bush's stem cell decision is a thoughtful first step toward resolving the ethical conundrums posed by the rapid advance of science. But how far is far enough? New rules are just a start." (Editorial, "Bush's Tough Choice Moves Critical Research Forward," USA Today, August 10, 2001)

ELECTED OFFICIALS AND POLITICAL FIGURES:

Senator Olympia Snowe: "The President made a thoughtful and responsible decision that gives scientists the tools they need to begin the exploration of this exciting frontier of medical research, which brings hope to millions of Americans suffering the effects of disease and illness. His decision, bolstered by a Presidential commission that will monitor research and establish guidelines, begins the process of opening the door to further progress. I know the President wrestled and struggled with this decision, reaching his conclusion only after discussing and meeting with advocates on both sides of this issue. . . . I believe his decision is right for our nation, and reflects the views of the vast majority of Americans with family members who have suffered from these illnesses. The President's decision tonight gives America's best and brightest researchers federal support, complimented by the work of the National Institutes of Health and the National Science Foundation, to explore to potential of these amazing cells, and ensure maintenance of the highest scientific and ethical standards." (Senator Snowe, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

Senator Tom Harkin: "I'm glad that the President has decided to permit and encourage our medical scientists to do stem cell research. As the Chairman of the Senate subcommittee that funds all medical research, I want to work with the President and Members of Congress to move this research forward in a robust, but ethical manner. We must also consult with our top scientists to make sure we have an adequate number of stem cell lines to allow this research to reach its fullest potential. Stem cells hold so much promise for curing illnesses like diabetes, Alzheimer's, Parkinson's and spinal cord injuries that we cannot afford to wait any longer." (Senator Tom Harkin, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

Senator Bill Frist: "I believe the president has done the nation a great service by allowing promising embryonic stem-cell research to proceed while maintaining strong restrictions on the extent of the research and ensuring comprehensive oversight." ("Reactions To Bush Decision On Stem-Cell Research," Reuters, August 9, 2001)

Senator Orrin Hatch: “I believe that the President’s announcement is a major step in the right direction. This was a victory for biomedical research and the promise it holds for all Americans. I think what he did was positive. President Bush’s decision allows very promising research to go forward, research that will potentially help up to 100 million Americans. The decision showed real presidential leadership. It was a thoughtful, deliberative decision made after prayer and the most careful consultation with ethicists, families, scientists, doctors and religious leaders.” (Senator Orrin Hatch, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

Senator Sam Brownback: “I think the President really took a thoughtful line. I am concerned about some of the lines that he breeched through. But he also put clear limitations on things. And as we’re going into this brand-new field, as we’re looking at these possibilities, and we all want to cure these terrible diseases, I think he really tried to make a straight and narrow path as much as he could.” (CBS’ “The Early Show,” August 10, 2001)

Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison: “I think he is going in the right direction, and I know he gave this issue the careful consideration and weight it deserves,” she said.” (Bennett Roth, “Headaches Ahead For Bush,” The Houston Chronicle, August 9, 2001)

Senator Jean Carnahan: “I support continuing federal funding of stem-cell research within the current ethical guidelines. I will need to review the specifics of the president’s proposal to ensure that it allows the most promising avenues of research to continue, but his declaration of support for federal funding of stem-cell research is a positive development.” (Steven Thomma, “Bush Supports Limited Embryonic Stem-Cell Research,” Knight Ridder, August 10, 2001)

Representative Benjamin A. Gilman: “I am pleased that President Bush, after fully examining this issue, has decided to support federal funding for limited embryonic stem cell research. Scientists have stated that embryonic stem cells may provide the key to developing cures for a variety of diseases including Parkinson’s, Alzheimer’s, juvenile diabetes and spinal cord injuries. By allowing federally funded research we are providing scientists with all the tools they need to proceed with this important research and, hopefully, will be able to achieve a number of cures at an early date.” (Congressman Gilman, Press Release, August 10, 2001)

Representative Mike Pence: “I was pleased that President Bush tonight refused to fund research that would destroy human embryos,” Pence said. “The President drew a moral line earlier this year when he promised to ‘oppose federal funding for stem cell research that involved destroying living human embryos.’ I commend him for keeping his promise with tonight’s decision. At its core, President Bush’s statement reveals a continued commitment to his belief in the fundamental value and sanctity of human life. . . . For the President, tonight’s decision was a pragmatic one. It satisfied supporters of stem cell research with limited funding, and it pleased opponents with a ban on further destruction of human embryos. I also truly believe President Bush searched his heart in arriving at this conclusion. In his statement this evening, the President revealed that he had wrestled with his conscience and with God over his decision.” (Congressman Pence, Press Release, August 9, 2001)

The Republican Leadership Council: “The fact that President Bush approached this important issue in such a deliberative manner ought to be commended,” stated Mark Miller, executive director of the RLC. “The President considered all viewpoints and delivered a well thought out opinion based on his belief that this research will advance the greater good of society. . . . President Bush deserves credit for his thoughtful decision on an issue with tremendous implications for science and public health for years to come.” (Republican Leadership Council, Press Release, August 10, 2001)

JOINT AGENCY REPORT TO CONGRESS

LAFAYETTE BUILDING RENOVATION PLAN AND FINANCIAL OPTIONS

JUNE 1, 2001

Revised August 6, 2001

SUMMARY OF OWNER'S FINANCIAL RETURNS

The following tables present the projected internal rates of return (IRR) for the building renovation of the Lafayette building under the two capital funding options. The Prospectus-level funding models are presented in two scenarios: one includes swing space expenses and the other model omits swing space expenses. Excluding swing space costs most accurately reflects a private sector equity partner deal and thus provides a more accurate comparison to a true market deal. The privately financed models are for both 30 and 50 years.

Return (IRR) Summary – Traditional Funding and Public/Private*

Partner	Traditional with Swing Space Expense	Traditional – No Swing Space Expense	Public / Private 30 Year	Public / Private 50 Year
Government	13.95%	19.81%	19.61%	19.92%
Private Partner	N/A	N/A	23.37%	23.50%

* Prospectus-level funding models assume no leverage.

The following tables present the projected net present values for the government and private equity partner over a 30 and 50-year master property lease assumption:

Net Present Value (NPV) Summary – Traditional Funding and Public/Private*

Partner	Traditional with Swing Space Expense	Traditional – No Swing Space Expense	Public / Private 30 Year	Public / Private 50 Year
Government @ 6.3%	$127,200,479	$168,035,353	$50,817,192	$68,975,447
Private Partner @ 6.3%	N/A	N/A	$56,698,479	$69,157,435
Private Partner @ 12.0%	N/A	N/A	$22,586,216	$24,716,755

* Prospectus-level funding models assume no leverage.

The overall returns and net present value to the government vary between the two funding scenarios, due to varying equity contributions and a debt provider in the private scenario that receives annual payments. Both the traditional and private scenarios offer benefits and drawbacks. In the traditional funding method, the government will be responsible for the entire renovation cash outlay and will assume all development and construction risk. Positive benefits to this scenario include the government having total control over all decisions affecting the building, along with GSA receiving 100% of the net cash flow generated and any upside associated with the operation of the building. A private equity partner focused solely on real estate management could potentially offer an additional financial benefit to the government by way of efficient management and thorough real estate operating knowledge. However, as GSA also has experience, our benefit from utilizing a private partner in this area would be marginal.

The Public/Private Partnership alternative can be constructed for the Lafayette Building so as to respond to scoring rules under capital lease or lease-purchase definitions. Should GSA be given congressional authority to enter into Public/Private Partnerships, the authority would specify how the scoring issue is resolved. A Public/Private Partnership would be the higher cost alternative in Present Value terms compared to the direct funding model. The higher cost is attributable to the lower costs of federal funds for construction. Nonetheless, a Public/Private Partnership alternative can be a valuable resource to leverage scarce capital investment dollars to allow more renovations of federal buildings in strong real estate markets.

GSA also considers total overall cost to the government according to three different scenarios: leasing, building and renovation. The results differ from the models in this analysis because they are totally expense driven and not return driven. The following table summarizes the results from the cost analysis, and indicates that renovation would be the least costly alternative to the government when compared to building new or leasing. Total present value cost represents the total overall cost to the government over a 30-year period, including operating expenses.

Total Present Value Cost Analysis

Scenario	Total Present Value Cost *
Lease	$261,801,000
Build	$206,661,000
Renovate	$196,462,000

* Assumes a government discount rate of 5.3%

Joint venture private financing also provides benefits and drawbacks for the government. Benefits include no initial cash outlay, only an imputed value of the government's partnership capital is contributed. Additionally, the government bears none of the risk associated with the renovation. The developer partner will obtain construction financing and will be responsible for payment of the loan upon stabilization. Lastly, the government will retain 100% ownership of the Lafayette Building upon expiration of the master property lease. Drawbacks include a possible disproportionate share of net cash flows based upon the ultimate structure of the transaction, along with the lack of total control over renovation, construction and ultimate operation of the building.

Prior models assumed that a market rental rate will be paid by the tenants of the building. For comparison purposes, the following analysis considers the rent levels needed to reflect the cost of modernizing the space under direct federal funding and Public/Private Partnership. The imputed land and building values were removed from the analysis. Under the Private/Public Partnership option the private entity is limited to a maximum 20% return. The analysis seeks the rent needed to be in equilibrium to attain the desired hurdle rate and where the Net Present Value equals 0. The imputed federal rate is 6.3% for the analysis.

Stripped Comparison Rent Cost w/o Imputed Land And Building Values

	Base Rent (RSF)	Operating Expenses	Total
Direct Federal Funding	$11.19	$8.79	$19.98
Public/Private Partnership	$26.60	$8.79	$35.39

The direct federal funding method requires a full service rent of $19.33 to cover the expenses of renovating the Lafayette building. The Public/Private Partnership option requires a full service rent of $35.39 per RSF to provide a 20% IRR to the private sector partner.

The following analysis considers only the present value of the modernization costs for the two options. There are no imputed land or building values or operating expenses used in the analysis. It shows that Direct Federal Funding is the low cost alternative to acquire modernized space for the tenants.

Stripped PV cost w/o operating expense costs.

	Present Value ¹
Direct Federal Funding	$83,291,000
Public/Private Partnership	$91,833,430

¹ Present Value based on 6.3%.

The following table summarizes benefits and drawbacks to the government under both scenarios:

Capital Funding Options Benefits and Drawbacks – Owner/Equity Partner

	Traditional Funding	Public/Private Partnership
Development/Construction Risk	Neutral ²	Benefit
Capital Investment	Neutral ³	Benefit
Operating Control	Benefit	Drawback
Ownership	—	—
Cost of Financing	Benefit	Drawback
Total Capital Investment (Budget Authority) ¹	$69 million	$0

¹Excludes move and relocation costs of $12.2 million.

²Depending on the construction contracting method, the government can reduce risk. For example, construction risk can be minimized by the design-bid-build method.

³The Public/Private Partnership would allow GSA to leverage its limited capital investment dollars to modernize a larger number of federal buildings.

SUMMARY OF TENANT EXPENSES

The two primary tenants of the Lafayette Building [the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Export-Import Bank] will face increased occupancy costs following renovation of the building that will bring it up to Class A-/B+ standards. Whether GSA or a private equity partner renovates the building, the rents will be marked-to-market.

The following table presents the current rent, net of expenses, paid by the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Export-Import Bank, and what they can expect to pay in market rent (2001 dollars) after renovation is complete.

Tenant Occupancy Cost Analysis

Tenant	Current Rent per Useable Square Foot¹	Rent per Useable Square Foot after Renovation²	Difference
VA	$30.00	$57.40	$27.40
Ex-Im Bank	$30.00	$57.40	$27.40

¹Equivalent rate per RSF = $20.98

²Equivalent rate per RSF = $46.38

Total rental payments over a five-year period are presented in the table below. The figures are presented as a status quo scenario, in which the current tenants remain in the building, and as a renovation scenario in which the tenants return to the building after renovation is complete. During the three years the Lafayette Building is being renovated, the tenants will move into comparable office space in a different building, known as swing space. Swing space rent will be more expensive than current rent paid today, as the tenants will be charged market rent plus a premium for the short lease duration.

The following table presents total occupancy costs over a five-year period. The costs are presented in two scenarios: (1) assuming no renovation is undertaken and (2) assuming the renovation is completed. For comparison purposes, the occupancy costs for the renovation scenario are presented with 2001 rental rates and with the same square footage assumptions as the status quo scenario.

Total Five Year Occupancy Cost Analysis

Tenant	5-Year Rent Expense under Status Quo Scenario (1)	5-Year Rent Expense under Concept Two Scenario (2)	Difference (In dollars and percent)
VA	$27,078,811	$50,217,289	$23,138,478	85.4%
Ex-Im Bank	$18,782,952	$34,832,731	$16,049,779	85.4%

Note: Useable square footage is based on Lafayette Renovation feasibility report (dated 5/17/01) of approximately 169,000 usf for VA and 117,000 usf for Ex-Im Bank. Rental rates are based on the Bolan Smart financial analysis (see MAP feasibility report, dated 5/17/01). For comparison purposes, we have assumed the same square footage and rental rates in 2001 dollars.

The average annual difference is $4.6 million for the VA and $3.2 million for the Ex-Im Bank, with average annual percentage increases of 17.1%. The market rate presented in this report is indicative of current Class A-/B+ rates for a building with a location similar to the Lafayette Building. Current economic conditions are affecting the real estate market, causing increased vacancies in some submarkets and easing upward pressure on rents. Thus, the rental rates presented may not be indicative of market rates at the time of occupancy, but are best estimates given recent market performance.

The renovation of the Lafayette Building will have a direct impact on certain relocation and moving expenses. The following table presents all move and relocation costs associated with the renovation and the party, or parties, responsible for these costs under the scenario presented in this report.

Move and Relocation Costs¹

Expense	Amount ¹	Date Incurred	Responsibility
Initial Move Cost	$4,795,916	2005	Agency ²
Swing Space Costs	$46.20 per sf	2005-2007	Agency –
Move Back Costs	$7,516,453	2008	Agency
Tenant Improvements	$13,528,218	2007	GSA/Private Partner

¹Costs are based on Concept Two scenario (from MAP feasibility study dated 5/17/01).

²See Appendix A - General Modeling Assumptions, move costs.

Under GSA pricing policy, the tenant is responsible for move and swing space costs. GSA provides a base general allowance of $31.92 per useable square foot for tenant improvements and assigns each agency a “tier” level for additional tenant improvements. The VA and Export-Import are both assigned a Level 2 tier for improvements, representing a 20% premium above base levels. Upon returning to the Lafayette Building, the tenants will face higher occupancy costs, but will benefit from vastly improved space. The following table presents benefits and drawbacks to the tenants given a renovation of the Lafayette Building.

Tenant Benefits and Drawbacks of Renovation

Improved space	Benefit
More efficient space	Benefit
More overall space	Benefit
Complete systems upgrades	Benefit
Less expensive than permanently relocating to comparable building	Benefit
Short term move	Drawback

Note: The increase in leasing costs is not included as a benefit or drawback for the tenant, as it is a function of receiving higher quality space.

Both funding options present benefits and drawbacks to the government. As the owner, the best financial return from a net present value standpoint is to fund the renovation through direct federal funding. However, this requires a substantial capital outlay that must compete with other urgent federal modernization projects. The Public/Private Partnership program would allow the government to leverage its capital dollars to renovate its buildings. The Public/Private Partnership program is not necessarily a benefit to the government since it is a more expensive option than direct federal funding. However, PBS has so many buildings in dire need of modernization that the Public/Private Partnership program could at times be worth the additional cost to get and prevent further deterioration or solve an emergency problem. Both methods result in similar overall investment (IRR) returns of 19.8% for the federally funded project and 19.6% for the Public/Private Partnership.

From a tenant's standpoint, the benefits and drawbacks remain the same under either funding option. The tenants' occupancy costs (rent) will be marked to market for both direct and public/private funding so there is no net gain or loss to the tenants under either scenario.

IV. APPENDIX C - PARTNERSHIP FINANCIAL MODELS

CONSIDERATIONS TO PUBLIC/PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP

The privately financed transaction presented in this report assumes the following capital structure, in order of priority:

- The government contributes an imputed capital account, equal to 49% of the overall equity required for renovation. The government then receives a 5% return on its imputed value. This return is most senior in the capital structure.
- Construction financing is obtained for 60% of the total cost of renovation. The loan is assumed to accrue interest at 7.5% annually, and will provide for full interest deferral and no amortization. Payoff of the loan is subordinate only to the government's return.

- A private equity partner is assumed to contribute the equity required to complete the renovation after construction debt is placed, which in this model is 40% of the total cost of renovation. The private partner will be due a preferred return of 11%, which is subordinate to payment of the debt and payment to the government.
- In the event of a capital event such as a refinancing, excess proceeds will be used to first pay any unpaid returns due to the above capital sources. After that, excess proceeds will be used to pay off the private equity partner's equity contribution. Assuming refinancing proceeds will fully retire the equity partner's contribution, the remaining excess proceeds will be split in accordance with the partners' overall interest.
- When the equity partner's contribution is fully retired, the preferred return will stop being paid.
- Any excess cash flow remaining after all of the above distributions are paid will be split in accordance with the corresponding equity contribution percentages.

This public/private analysis is similar to previous analysis prepared under a separate study for the GAO. The partnership analysis presented in this report also solves for the projected IRR and NPV for both the government and the private equity interests over the prescribed hold period.

If a public/private project were to be considered for the Lafayette Building, we believe the following conclusions represent an accurate indication of how the private sector would react:

- The private sector will base return thresholds on the probability of the current tenancy to execute commitments that they will sign a lease of at least 10 years and return to the Lafayette Building as soon as renovation is complete. We have assumed this scenario for the models in this report. If a commitment is obtained, the private sector will partner for returns in the upper teens. If a commitment is not obtained, private sector partners will require a higher return.
- A 30-year scenario for the private financing scenario is shorter than the private sector at large is accustomed to underwriting. Many private ground lease transactions involve terms of 75 to 99 years. However, the Lafayette Building's prominent location in the heart of Washington's central business district along with the implied safety of partnering with the government (and guaranteed return of current tenancy) will attract interest from the private sector. The structure of the transaction could be executed in a multitude of ways, and a shorter master property lease may be mitigated through increased private sector returns, for example. We believe the ability to flexibly structure a Public/Private Partnership will serve to attract interest from the private sector, though even higher interest could be generated with a longer term.
- A longer master property lease term enables a private equity partner to refinance the permanent debt multiple times, allowing them to recapture significant additional proceeds that boost overall returns. Longer terms would also serve to lower the private sector's focus on exit strategies, since typical private equity deals usually are for a maximum of ten years. Again, the overall deal could be structured in many ways that would alleviate much of the concern over master lease term since there are private equity participants that could underwrite a ‘redevelop and hold’ scenario.

- The recent slowdown in the national economy is affecting commercial real estate transactions. High yield equity participants have raised capital for investment, but are very selectively investing due to the economic uncertainty. The reduced amount of private equity participants could have an impact on the demand for this type of project. The high profile nature of the project and the attraction of partnering with the government will draw interest, although possibly at a somewhat lower level if current economic conditions persist.
- Favorable conditions in the debt market serve to enhance the return structure, and the private sector will attempt to obtain maximum leverage on the property. However, more conservative underwriting due to the economy has led many commercial banks and insurance companies to lend approximately 60-70% on a loan to value basis. We believe the quality of the tenancy within the Lafayette Building and premier location should help to secure permanent financing of approximately 75% loan to value.
- The private financing models presented in this report may not accurately reflect a true private equity market scenario. We believe that under real market conditions, a developer would renovate the property, stabilize and then sell its partnership interest. A private equity source would most likely take the developer out, hold for a period of five to ten years, and then sell its partnership interest. Again, with numerous structuring scenarios, the ultimate outcome could be done in a way that is favorable to both the government and private sector.
- In typical private sector transactions where there is a shorter master property lease term than is desirable, a “put right” or some other extension instrument would likely be structured. The government will likely not option a put right, thus the private sector will price this into the deal, which could be done through higher return requirements, lower master property lease payments or disproportionate splits in excess cash flow.

THE PUBLIC/PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM

Public/Private Partnerships are not normally used in the renovation of buildings. In government real estate transactions, they primarily have been used in trades in kind. This is where the government receives a benefit in exchange for land. Public/Private Partnerships for this renovation would have the private entity fund the renovation and the government leases back the asset to compensate for the private funds expended. Because private financing is more expensive to the Federal taxpayer than Government-finance, public-private partnerships as a vehicle for obtaining private financing for major federal construction and repair projects are only recommended when direct federal funding is not available, nor likely to be available in a timely manner. The use of an outlease with a leaseback should only be used when such a transaction is less expensive than simple renovation or construction.

The General Accounting Office (GAO) supported the use of partnerships with the private sector only when they reflect the best economic value available for the federal government in its April 2001 report, “Funding Repairs and Alterations Has Been a Challenge – Expanded Financing Tools Needed” (GAO-01-452).

If they were used for a renovation project, the partnership would be structured in the following manner:

- the government contributes a leasehold interest to the partnership as its equity contribution;
- the private sector provides equity in the form of contributed funds and expertise in the financial and strategic aspects of property improvement.

Partnerships with the private sector have the greatest potential for success in situations where properties are located in markets with a healthy demand; there exists corresponding private sector investment potential; and there is a continued need for agency space that is not adequately satisfied with existing government facilities.

Leases for agency tenants would be subject to the same budgetary scoring procedures currently used for leasing space in privately owned buildings. The government will benefit by retaining the long-term ownership interest in the improved property, receiving a preferential option to lease the modernized space, and sharing in cash flow generated.

GENERAL ASSUMPTIONS:

- Two models are considered: direct congressional funding and a Public/Private Partnership. Within the public/private scenario we have assumed that the government will enter into a master property lease to a new partnership for two terms – 30 and 50 years.
- The overall return to the private sector would likely be higher in a true market analysis, in which the developer would likely renovate and then sell its partnership interest upon stabilization, or nearly full occupancy, of the property.
- The developer/equity partner is assumed to take a disproportionate share of excess proceeds from retiring the construction debt and obtaining permanent financing, because of the construction risk the developer is undertaking. The split is assumed to be 80% to the private partner and 20% to the government. Any excess proceeds from additional refinancing are split according to contribution percentages.
- Swing space and moving cost expenses in this report are assumed to be the responsibility of the tenants, except for the traditional funding model showing the government paying for swing space costs for return comparison purposes. A true market deal may have different characteristics as to the responsibility of moving and swing space costs, since responsibility for these expenses can be negotiated.
- Financial information for all models was obtained from the Lafayette Bldg. feasibility study submitted by Metropolitan Architects & Planners and Bolan Smart Associates (dated 5/17/01). That study presented three scenarios – (1) do nothing, (2) complete renovation with no additional space added and (3) a complete renovation with additional space added as a result of some corridor demolition. To be consistent with what the private market will demand, we have used the financial information only from concept two - full renovation with additional space added through demolition of some corridors.

- Three construction methods are considered in the feasibility study: design/bid/build, which is the most conventional method; design/build, where the control of the design is given to the contractor; and fast track, where the time of construction is not reduced and design is developed alongside actual construction. Both design/build and fast track offer faster renovation schedules but are much more risky. The feasibility study assumes a design/bid/build schedule, as do the models in this report.
- In the private sector-financing model, the government will hold a 49% equity share in the new partnership based on a portion of the value of the property.
- In the privately financed model, the private sector partner will contribute equity based on the total cost of the renovation less a construction loan of 60% loan-to-cost, and will receive a preferred return on its investment. The government will not guarantee the construction loan, or any subsequent loan. The construction loan is assumed to accrue interest at 7.5% annually, which equates to 325 basis points over 6-month LIBOR rates, and will provide for full interest deferral and no amortization. The private partner will pay off the entire construction loan along with interest accrued before securing permanent financing and will keep 80% of any additional proceeds for bearing the risk of development.
- Once the construction loan is paid, permanent debt will be obtained with leverage of approximately 75% loan to value. Debt is assumed to be for a 10-year term with a 25-year amortization and at a cost of 7.0% annually, which equates to 175 basis points over the then-current 10-year Treasury rate. In cases where the 10-year term expires and 10 or less years remain in the analysis, it is assumed the entity will seek to extend the debt for the remaining length of the hold period, as financing will be difficult to obtain. In scenarios where there is greater than 10 years remaining in the analysis, it is assumed the entity will refinance. Refinancing proceeds will be determined by capping that year's income with leverage at 65% of the value. Proceeds will be used to pay off the existing loan, with additional proceeds split between the government and the private partner based on share of equity.
- The private sector will be due a preferred return of 11.0%. This disbursement will be due before any excess cash flow is split and will accrue annually at the preferred rate if there is not enough cash flow to cover the entire preference in a given year.
- In the privately financed model, the government will receive income through preferential master property lease payments as well as a share of cash flow from the operations of the building. The master lease payment will be paid before the preferred return due the private equity partner and before any excess cash flow is split. The annual lease payment is calculated at 5% of the imputed value of the government's capital account in the venture. The 5% annual payment provides for a reasonable return to the government and risk-adjusted rate of return to the private sector partner.
- The building will be leased to current tenants at market rates existing at time of delivery. Return requirements to the private sector will escalate if the current tenants do not occupy the building upon completion of renovation.

- The 50-year model is an extension of the 30-year model. All financial information from year 30 was extended to year 50, with no escalation in revenue or expenses, as corresponding increases in both categories would end up canceling out any gains.
- The first year of this analysis is when renovation is projected to commence on the Lafayette Building, in this case 2005. The government's return is calculated for the period from the commencement of the property development through 2035 for the 30-year scenario and 2055 for the 50-year scenario. The government will receive cash flow and will retain 100% unencumbered ownership of the property at the end of the master property lease term.
- The internal rate of return (IRR) for the private partner is the rate of return for the series of cash flows starting with the initial cash contribution (the year redevelopment starts) through the end of the master lease term. For the government, the initial cash "outlay" is the implied value of the master property lease.

SUMMARY OF PARTNERSHIP INVESTMENT MODEL:

Due to its excellent location in the Central Business District (CBD) and the significant planned improvements of the building's space, the property is expected to reach stabilization within two years of completion at market lease rates.

As noted in the general assumptions, the government will contribute a leasehold interest to the partnership and will retain a 49% equity interest in the partnership. Its equity interest in the partnership will be appraised at $26.6 million. The private partner will obtain a construction loan of 60% loan-to-cost and will contribute an equal amount of equity to the project.

The government will receive income through annual lease payments of $1,329,378 (5% of the contributed value of its leasehold interest) as well as a 49% share of cash flow profit from the operations of the building. The government is projected to receive a 19.61% internal rate of return over the 30-year period, and a 19.92% internal rate of return over the 50-year period. Projected net present values for the government over the 30 and 50-year scenarios are $50,817,192 and $68,975,447, respectively.

The private partner will receive an 11% preferred return on its cash investment, prior to division of the remaining available cash flow, and will receive a projected internal rate of 23.37% over the 30-year period, and a 23.50% IRR over the 50-year period. Projected net present values for the private partner over the 30 and 50-year scenarios at the government discount rate are $56,698,479 and $69,157,435, respectively. At a 12.0% discount rate, the projected NPVs over the same time periods are $22,586,216 and $24,716,755.

V. APPENDIX D - MARKET ANALYSIS

Note: The following market analysis is included only as informational support for the market rental rates previously mentioned. The overall health of the Washington, D.C. metropolitan real estate market will support rental rates in the range of those mentioned throughout the report.

BOTTOM LINE

A long-running constraint on the Washington, DC economy, federal employment and spending cutbacks, is diminishing in light of the improved fiscal health of the federal government. Meanwhile, the growing high-tech industries are reducing Washington, DC's reliance on the government. A turnaround in the District's economy, brought about by the new mayor and the federal commitment toward revitalization, represents an upside risk for the metro area. Washington, DC will be an above-average performer over the long term.

The Washington, DC market for office space finished 2000 in strong to booming condition. The market will end 2001 in somewhat weaker condition, though still very stable. Between 2001 and 2003, demand will rise an average of 3.2% per year, a decline from the 4.4% pace seen from 1995 through 1999.

ECONOMIC OVERVIEW

The Washington, D.C. metropolitan area consists of the nation's capital as well as 18 counties and six independent cities in Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia. These counties and cities are often aggregated into three larger submarkets: Northern Virginia, Suburban Maryland, and the District of Columbia itself. With more than one million jobs, Northern Virginia represents 42% of the metropolitan area's employment base, while Suburban Maryland represents 34% and the District the remaining 24%.

The Washington metropolitan area is the healthiest it has been in a number of years due to the improved financial condition of the federal government and strength in high tech, construction, tourism and business services. Income and consumption growth remains solid; office markets are booming, and home prices are appreciating rapidly. Northern Virginia continues to be the fastest-growing portion of the metro area, followed by Suburban Maryland and the District.

High-tech hub. The Washington, DC metro area continues to solidify its position as a high-tech hub. The area's high-tech presence earned it a third place national ranking in software employment density by the Software Information and Industry Association and in absolute numbers by Economy.com. The metro area supports three times the national average of programming, engineering, systems analyst and tech support jobs. A significant portion of the high-tech employment is directly within federal government agencies. Moreover, several area universities with large high-tech research activities rely heavily on federal government grants and contracts. The high-tech agglomeration continues to attract new firms, such as U.S. Dataport's two million square foot data warehouse campus in Northern Virginia. Such expansions will result in more spillover effects for the area as tech firms choose to locate close to Washington, DC's Internet infrastructure.

Affirming Washington, DC's status as a high-tech hub and boding well for future growth is the amount of venture capital funding that is pouring into the area. According to PricewaterhouseCoopers, during the second quarter the District received $188 million in funding. Virginia received an astounding $560 million, with the majority of this going into Northern Virginia, and Maryland received a record-breaking $398 million. Three-quarters of all the venture capital is going toward telecommunications, software, and business services.

House prices. The diminishing supply of available homes is fueling strong growth in single-family existing home prices. After experiencing sub-national appreciation rates of around 2% in 1999, home prices are now 7% higher than one year ago, according to the Freddie Mac/Fannie Mae repeat-purchase index. House price appreciation in Washington, DC is expected to exceed the national pace throughout the forecast horizon. Despite median house prices that are more than 20% above the national average, the high incomes of Washington, DC households have also maintained above-average housing affordability.

Construction. The tremendous expansion of the metro area is driving up construction costs, while the tight labor market and work backlogs for contractors are making it more difficult to complete projects. Earlier this construction season, the Department of Public Works was forced to couple road resurfacing projects with other bigger, construction projects due to the lack of bids for resurfacing work.. Construction costs are rising more rapidly in the Maryland suburbs, where hourly wages are increasing at a rate of 5.3% while all private-sector wages are increasing at a rate of 3.6%.

As in many US cities, labor markets in Washington D.C. continue to tighten, suggesting slower job creation in the coming years. Over the next four years, job growth will slip to an average of 2% per year from 2.7% over the past four years. Even with this slowdown, however, job growth in Washington will continue to outpace growth in the U.S. as a whole.

The tremendous expansion of the metro area is driving up construction costs, while the tight labor market and work backlogs for contractors are making it more difficult to complete projects. Bid escalation has not been severe yet, but continued strong demand for new construction projects will increase this likelihood.

THE WASHINGTON METROPOLITAN AREA OFFICE MARKET

The Washington, D.C. office market is one of the hottest in the nation. The area ranks as one of the top office investment spots in the nation during 2001, according to a study by PricewaterhouseCoopers and the Lend Lease Real Estate. Moreover, according to Delta Associates, strong investment and development opportunities will continue over the next few years. While the metro economy is home to many struggling telecom firms, it also supports tech industries that will benefit from increased military expenditures and government business services. Additionally, expected federal surpluses will provide the economic stimulus to maintain strong real estate markets even as the national economy slows.

At 3.6%, the office vacancy rate in Washington, D.C. is among the lowest on record. Northern Virginia had the tightest market with a vacancy rate of only 2.8%, while Suburban Maryland recorded a higher vacancy rate of 5.5%, and the District itself had a rate of only 3.3%.

Meanwhile, net absorption through year-end 2000 was more than in any full year since the 1980s. Nearly two-thirds of the absorption occurred in Northern Virginia, reflecting this region's emergence as one of the top US "New Economy" locations. In the District, revitalization and a more proactive government have fueled increased office demand, making the District one of the top-performing center cities in the nation, while Suburban Maryland has benefited from strong demand from high tech and biotech companies.

That strong demand, in turn, pushed rents up by an estimated 20% in 2000 to their highest level on record. Top rents in the District are above $50 per square foot, while rents are reaching $43 per square foot in some of Northern Virginia's hottest submarkets such as Reston/Herndon, Tysons Corner and Loudoun County.

More than 3 million square feet of space was delivered in the third quarter 2000, 50% more than in the second quarter and a trend indicative of the large volume of new construction soon to be delivered into the market. Indeed, at the end of the third quarter, 22 million square feet of space was under construction. Of this space, however, more than half was pre-leased, suggesting some discipline in the market. Nevertheless, we expect vacancy rates to move toward 9% this year before climbing to 12.4% in 2002 as supply outpaces demand. As the market loosens, rent pressures will gradually begin to ease.

WASHINGTON, DC OFFICE MARKET CONDITIONS

Through year-end 2000, the Washington, DC office market had seen contract awards of approximately 17.0 million square feet, an increase of 6% over the 1999 total of 16.2 million square feet. Awards will average approximately 16.0 million square feet annually from 2001 through 2003, a 73% gain over the 9.3 million square feet averaged from 1995 through 1999. During the last 18 years, office construction reached its peak in 1987, when 23.3 million square feet were awarded. Awards bottomed out at 3.8 million square feet in 1992.

Between 2000 and 2003, office demand will rise an average of 3.2% per year, a decline from the 4.4% pace seen from 1995 through 1999, however still above national averages.

The Washington, DC market for office space finished 2000 in a strong to booming condition. The market will end 2001 in a slightly weaker condition, although still very stable. Conditions should remain strong through the end of 2003.

VI. APPENDIX E - REPORT DEVELOPMENT AND PARTICIPANTS

A Joint Task Force was created to respond to the Conference Report request. In response to the Conference Report request, a joint task force including GSA, VA and Export-Import Bank, met regularly to develop a report outlining the need to renovate the Lafayette Building. The joint task force was initiated in January, 2001 and jointly developed the agency program requirements and identified the project parameters. All joint task force participants reviewed all stages of the report up to the final draft.

GSA hired Metropolitan Architects and Planners in February to develop the feasibility study to renovate the Lafayette Building. Concurrently, GSA hired AEW Capital Management Inc in March to aid in the preparation of the analysis for the joint report. The following personnel and consultants were instrumental in developing this report.

I. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

BACKGROUND

The following report to Congress incorporates and synthesizes the findings of a separately commissioned Building Evaluation Report and Feasibility study for the renovation of the Lafayette Building. Congress has directed the General Services Administration (GSA) to work with the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) and the Export-Import Bank of the United States (Export-Import Bank) to develop a renovation plan considering all alternatives authorized by law for the Lafayette Building.

The 12-story, 559,875 gross square foot Lafayette Building was constructed in 1940 in a unique, angled shape that creates irregular and inefficient areas. A top-tier location in the heart of Washington's vibrant central business district makes the building a premier federally owned facility. The building is under the control and jurisdiction of GSA. The VA Occupies 60% of the building and the Export-Import Bank occupies 40%. After 60 years in use, the building needs a complete renovation to provide modern, efficient office space for the federal workforce and to maintain the building's competitive position within the marketplace. A recent study by an outside consultant recommends a single-phase renovation project, estimated to cost $70 million (in 2001 dollars). The renovation study states that the building exhibits a pressing need of general upgrading and refurbishment, including more efficient heating, ventilating, and air conditioning systems, new lighting, an up-to-date system of power and telecommunications distribution, energy-efficient fenestration, and restoration and/or replacement of interior finishes.

FUNDING OPTIONS

This report considers three methods of funding the proposed renovation of the building. The first funding option is through traditional congressional appropriation. The second funding option is through the use of a Public/Private Partnership between the government and a private entity. GSA does not have this authority at this time, so the Public/Private analysis is modeled in accordance with what GSA believes would be required to induce private sector participation in this venture under current market conditions. The third funding alternative is enhanced-use leasing, authorized for the Department of Veterans Affairs to use for its own properties.

RECOMMENDATION

After completing an analysis of the three funding alternatives, GSA recommends proceeding with the Lafayette Building renovation through direct congressional appropriation. This funding option returns the highest Net Present Value (NPV) to the Government among all the alternatives studied. Net Present Value is defined as the cumulative present value of all future cash inflows and outflows. The NPV, excluding costs associated with swing space,¹ is $168 million for traditional funding compared to a 30-year Public/Private Partnership NPV of $51 million. One of the primary reasons that congressional funding provides the highest NPV to the government is that in a Public/Private Partnership, GSA would be required to share the cash flow with a private partner, while in direct congressional appropriation GSA retains all excess cash flow. However, since GSA renovation projects must compete for scarce funding and the so many of GSA's buildings need extensive renovations, alternative funding via some kind of Public/Private Partnership presents the next best alternative.

PUBLIC/PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP OPTION

Public/Private Partnerships for this renovation are defined by having a private entity fund the renovation and the government leasing back the asset to compensate for the private funds expended. After a negotiated period or set rate of return, GSA shares in the revenue. Public/Private Partnerships can be structured in many forms. For analysis purposes, GSA has selected a generic partnership form with the following elements:

- (1) GSA retains ownership,
- (2) the partner brings all the money necessary to modernize the building,
- (3) GSA has 49% equity in the project,
- (4) GSA occupies the building in entirety and
- (5) the developer receives a market rate of return on its investment.

We have selected this form because it is appropriate for the situation and GSA receives a return on its 49% equity position.

The Public/Private Partnership will yield the government a lower overall NPV, but reduces the overall risk the government has towards the renovation. In this case, the economics show that a Public/Private Partnership is more expensive than direct federal funding, but cheaper than leasing space for the tenants. The private partner would bear all risk associated with completing and financing the renovation and would then share in the profits over the period of the master property lease. The master property lease would typically last from 30 to 75 years. At the end of the master property lease, the government would retain 100% ownership of the land and building. Public/Private Partnership legislation has yet to be approved; thus this option was modeled based on assumptions and not actual guidelines.

Generally, Public/Private Partnerships as a vehicle for obtaining private financing of Federal construction and repair projects are not recommended because private financing is more expensive to the Federal taxpayer than Government-finance. Still, with so many federal buildings in need of modernization, Public/Private Partnerships can make business sense when PBS is unable to get timely funding for a federal building modernization project. Although PBS has no authority now to do a Public/Private Partnership, a Public/Private Partnership would be useful if money continues to be scarce.

ADDITIONAL FUNDING OPTION – ENHANCED-USE LEASING

This option is not authorized, as VA does not own the building. Also, the VA authority is for underutilized facilities (an example is excess land adjoining a VA facility), so the renovation of the Lafayette building does not meet this criterion. Finally, the scope of this renovation is much larger than all previous projects the VA has completed with its enhanced-use leasing authority. As a footnote to enhanced-use leasing, the size and scale of the renovation requires an experienced entity with the expertise to deal with the complexity of the project, such as GSA's Public Buildings Service.

APPENDICES

The appendices to this report present key findings including: financial results for direct congressional appropriation and private equity joint venture scenarios, benefits and drawbacks to each method, occupancy costs to the tenants, and an analysis to determine the least costly alternative to the government over a 30-year period among leasing, building and renovation.

II. APPENDIX A - DISCUSSION OF BUILDING DEVELOPMENT PLAN, MARKET, AND MODELING ASSUMPTIONS:

EXISTING BUILDING AND PROPOSED REDEVELOPMENT PLAN:

The Lafayette Building was completed in 1940 and enjoys a premier location in Washington's central business district. It is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. The building has primary northwest frontage along Vermont Avenue. Eye Street borders to the north, 15th Street to the east and H Street to the south. The Department of Veterans Affairs and the Export-Import Bank currently occupy the building, along with a small GSA-PBS field office. Many of the original systems and construction remain, making the building obsolete by today's standards.

The building consists of basement and ground floors, as well as floors one through twelve. The building is 559,875 gross square feet and approximately 313,112 rentable square feet. The proposed renovation assumes two concepts:

- The first renovation concept maintains the building in its current configuration and preserving all of the historically significant interior corridors and other interior spaces. There is no gain in square footage, with both tenants maintaining the same space allocation.
- The second renovation concept will add substantial useable square footage (47,500 square feet) due to removal of historic corridors in some areas. The rentable to useable ratio will improve to a level of 1.24. The total renovation cost is estimated at $69.2 million (2001 dollars) or $124 per gross square foot for concept one and $69.1 million (2001 dollars) or $123 per gross square foot for concept two. The improvements will bring the building up to modern office building standards.

DESIGN OF THE BUILDING:

The Lafayette Building is of a unique shape and features massive walls and partitions. Its bay sizes are narrow and the overall configuration has sharply angled floors that create irregular, inefficient areas.

The Lafayette Building requires substantial renovation to bring the building up to current modern office building standards. New and efficient mechanical systems should be installed, along with replacing the current electrical system. The building also needs to be brought into compliance with disability access requirements, asbestos needs to be removed, and finishes require refurbishment. Replacement of the single-glazed windows will improve the building's energy efficiency. Because of its historical significance, the renovation will preserve the original design to the maximum extent feasible.²

² Note – some GSA initiatives, such as Sustainability ("Building Green"), Design Excellence and Construction Excellence measures, and level-4 security measures such as Blast-proofing and Glass Fragmentation were not included in the MAP feasibility report.

The first renovation concept will maintain the building in its current configuration and preserve all of the historically significant interior corridors and spaces. Restrooms and stairs would be rehabilitated, and only areas designated as renovation zones would be altered in more substantial ways to meet the needs of the two tenants. The second concept allows greater flexibility with respect to space planning within the office interiors by removing corridors in some areas even though they are considered historically significant. This will create more efficient layouts of workspace and offices. This concept also proposes some changes to the existing interiors to recapture space to use for mechanical equipment, utility closets and office space.

The models assume concept two and that zoning and historic preservation approval enabling the renovation of space noted above is obtained.

SUBMARKET OVERVIEW:

According to AEW Research, the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area is in its tenth year of a real estate cycle upswing. The regional market encompasses approximately 275 million square feet of space, making it the second largest office market in the country. The metro area's direct vacancy rate at the end of 2000 was 3.6%. The only other major U.S. markets that rival Washington's vacancy rate are Boston and San Francisco. Over 100 million square feet of office space is located within the District of Columbia, and demand for both Class A and Class B/C space has been strong, causing rental rates to increase significantly. Over the next five years, office employment is predicted to increase at close to 1.7% per year, which should support continued (albeit slower) absorption.

The Lafayette Building is located in the Central Business District (CBD) submarket, the largest of the seven submarkets within the District of Columbia. The area includes 36 million square feet of space, 85% of which is considered Class B/C space. Strong demand and moderate new construction in the area led to a sharp decline in vacancy rates, which fell from 10.6% in 1995 to 2.6% at the end of 2000. Rents rose 10% in 2000 to $42.50 per square foot for Class A space and $31.75 per square foot for Class B space, reflecting the tightening market conditions.

New supply is continuing to enter the market, prompted by a lack of large contiguous blocks of available space, robust absorption, rising rental rates and relatively low vacancy rates. Construction in the submarket is occurring at a fairly robust pace, although at considerably lower levels than one year ago. As of year-end 2000, there was 1.2 million square feet of space under construction or renovation according to Delta Associates. The recent economic slowdown is causing some planned developments to remain on hold.

Still, absorption has been equally strong. In 2000, 1.4 million square feet of space was absorbed. Anticipated absorption is expected to slow, but will continue to outpace deliveries of new space to the market, providing continued rate pressure through the next year. Beyond 2001, steady absorption and low vacancy rate should draw further new construction into the market, but not at levels that will push the market below strong/equilibrium conditions.

The factors affecting the District's ability to absorb space are expected to support continued positive market conditions. These factors include: the consistent performance of the business services sector; the continuation of a general turnaround and related ebb in the loss of population and increase in optimism in the city; and demand for office space supported by a plethora of policy organizations, trade associations and lobbying firms. The Lafayette Building is well located to benefit from these factors.

SPECIFIC PROPERTY MODELING ASSUMPTIONS:

Construction Costs:	$69,181,936 – concept one; $69,121,367 – concept two
Government Equity:	$26,587,568
Private Partner Equity:	$27,672,775
Anticipated Construction Loan:	$41,500,000, 7.5%, interest deferral, no amortization
Permanent Loan:	75% LTV, 7.0% interest, 25 year amortization
Refinanced Loans:	65% LTV, 7.0% interest, 25 year amortization
Annual Ground Rent:	$1,329,378
Government Share:	49%, based on imputed value of capital account
Private Partner Share:	51%
Capital Improvements:	In the 50-year model, we assume a standard charge of $50 per gross square foot is applied to the buildings for the purpose of additional building renovation in the sixth month of year 31. Another $50 per square foot is applied to complete the renovation at the beginning of year 32. The amounts for capital improvements are in 2001 dollars.

KEY GENERAL MODELING ASSUMPTIONS:

The Lafayette Building has been modeled by Bolan Smart Associates according to the following general real estate assumptions.

Renovation Method:	Design/Bid/Build – the most lengthy of all renovation scenarios, but substantially reduces risk with respect to construction and cost overruns.
Construction Start Date:	2005
Construction Completion:	36 months
Tenancy:	It is assumed the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Export-Import Bank will relocate to swing space until the renovation is complete and will return immediately thereafter.

Swing Space Rent:	$46.20 per rentable square foot
Moving Costs:	$15.00 per useable square foot
Re-occupancy Rent:	$41.07 per rentable square foot under concept one and $46.38 per rentable square foot under concept two.
Rental Growth Rate:	1.75% per year
Operating Expense Growth:	2.0% per year
Tenant Improvements:	During renovation, tenant improvement allowances are assumed at $37.50 per square foot.
Parking Income:	129 spaces at $200 per month per space.

III. APPENDIX B - DISCUSSION AND SUPPORTING ANALYSIS

OWNER AND TENANT RESULTS UNDER THE CAPITAL FUNDING OPTIONS

The Lafayette Building benefits from its excellent location on Lafayette Square with views of the White House. The property's premier location and strength of the local real estate market should serve to make the renovation financially successful through direct funding, and would attract significant interest from the private sector if a Public/Private Partnership funding option were to be considered. A complete renovation would substantially increase the appeal and long-term viability of the Lafayette Building.

The financial models included in this report analyze the following scenarios: (1) the government as sole holder under traditional prospectus funding and (2) the government as minority partner to a private sector developer/partner. This analysis assumes that a separate scenario modeled under enhanced-use lease authority will result in no difference from the Public/Private model results. All discussion about the Public/Private scenario applies to the enhanced-use scenario as well.

The identical results are due to the fact that enhanced-use leasing shares many of the same characteristics with public/private financing in that both scenarios involve accessing private sector equity capital, either equity or bond financing. Neither alternative will have an economic advantage over the other for purposes of renovating the Lafayette Building. Risk levels and required rates of return in the private capital markets are similar under both scenarios, consequently, no other scenario will be able to obtain a lower capital cost structure in the private capital markets.

SUBJECT: VETERANS AFFAIRS Report on S1114 Increase Amount of Educational Benefits for Veterans Under Montgomery GI Bill

DEADLINE: 3 p.m. Friday, August 17, 2001

In accordance with OMB Circular A-19, OMB requests the views of your agency on the above subject before advising on its relationship to the program of the President. Please advise us if this item will affect direct spending or receipts for purposes of the "Pay-As-You-Go" provisions of Title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

COMMENTS: This report states VA's views on S. 1114, which would incrementally increase the basic Montgomery GI Bill (MGIB) benefit from its current amount of $650/month to $1100/month in FY 2004. S. 1114 would also suspend the annual CPI-based adjustment in MGIB rates beginning in FY 2002, and would reinstate the adjustment in FY 2005. VA states that the President would support MGIB program improvements if they can be accommodated within the overall budget limits agreed to by the President and Congress. S. 1114 is substantively identical to H.R. 1291, which passed the House on June 19th.

The Honorable Arlen Specter
Ranking Member Committee on Veterans' Affairs
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Specter:

Pursuant to your letter of June 28, 2001, I am pleased to provide the Committee the views of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) and our cost estimate on S.1114, 107th Congress, which would "increase the amount of education benefits for veterans under the Montgomery GI Bill." VA's answers to your questions for the record will be sent to you under separate cover, as will our views on S. 1113.

S. 1114 would provide for stepped education assistance benefit increases under the Montgomery GI Bill (MGIB) for Fiscal Years 2002 through 2004. Individuals whose obligated period of active duty is three or more years would receive full-time monthly benefits of $800 for 2002, $950 for 2003, and $1,100 for 2004. Individuals whose obligated period of service is less than three years would receive monthly benefits of $650 for 2002, $772 for 2003, and $894 for 2004. Proportionately lesser amounts would be payable for less than full-time training.

This measure, further, would suspend the statutory annual CPI-based adjustment in MGIB rates beginning in Fiscal Year 2002 and would reinstate that adjustment beginning in Fiscal Year 2005.

The President's FY 2002 Budget includes the annual cost-of-living increase for education benefits for veterans and servicemembers, but does not include an additional MGIB benefit increase. However, the President would support MGIB program improvements, to include a reasonable increase in rates, if they can be accommodated within the overall budget limits agreed to by the President and Congress. In this regard, as mentioned in my June 7, 2001, testimony before the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee on Benefits, VA does support, within the framework of those spending limits, the stepped MGIB rate increases contained in H.R. 1291, a bill similar to S. 1114.

The Honorable Arlen Specter

Enactment of S. 1114, as drafted, would result in an increase in benefits cost subject to the pay-as-you-go (PAYGO) requirement of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990. VA estimates the benefits cost increase at approximately $250 million in FY 2002, a 5-year total of $3.2 billion over the period FYs 2002 – 2006, and a projected 10-year total of $8.3 billion over the period FYs 2002 – 2011. We are enclosing a detailed 10-year cost estimate, together with the assumptions and methodology used in arriving at this estimate.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

Anthony J. Principi

Methodology

a) Identification – S. 1114.

b) Highlights - This proposal provides for increases to the Montgomery GI Bill monthly benefit payments in Fiscal Years 2002, 2003, and 2004. The full-time rates for a participant whose obligated period of service is three or more years would increase from $650 to $800 in 2002, to $950 in 2003, and finally to $1,100 in 2004. For participants with an obligated period of service of less than three years, the full-time rate would increase from $528 to $650 for 2002, to $772 for 2003, and $894 for 2004. Proportionally lesser amounts would be payable for less than full-time training.

c) Estimated Benefit Costs and Trainee Estimate –

	Trainees (suction)	Obligations ($'s in 000)
2002	800	$ 250,000
2003	1,700	510,000
2004	4,200	779,000
2005	7,700	807,000
2006	11,700	833,000
2007	17,200	872,000
2008	24,100	946,000
2009	31,000	1,020,000
2010	38,200	1,105,000
2011	45,300	1,162,000
Five-Year Obligations		$3,179,000
Ten-Year Obligations		$8,284,000

d) Administrative Costs – We assume that any additional employment requirements or administrative costs will be absorbed with current resources.

e) Benefits Methodology – In costing this proposal, we increased the 2001 annual average rate shown in the 2002 Congressional Budget submission by the proposed 23.1 percent rate increase (rounded to the nearest dollar) to compute the revised annual average benefit payment in 2002, by 18.8 percent in 2003, and 15.8 percent in 2004, in lieu of automatic CPI adjustments. Commencing in fiscal year 2005, educational rate increases would once again be tied to the CPI. To compute the cost, we multiplied the revised annual average benefit payments by the number of chapter 30 trainees included in the 2002 Congressional Budget submission. The costs generated from this calculation were subtracted from the costs that were already included in the 2002 budget submission for the annual CPI increase to arrive at the additional monthly benefit payments. To compute the additional trainees from suction (i.e., the effect of new individuals being drawn into the program as a result of the proposed increased benefits), we assumed that the trainees from the 2002 Congressional Budget submission would gradually increase as the monthly benefit rose to make attending a four-year in-state public institution of higher learning more affordable. In the first year, we estimate that trainees would increase by .002 percent, with incremental increases reaching 13 percent by 2011.

f) Other Assumptions – Enactment date October 1, 2001.

107th CONGRESS

1st Session

S. 1114

To amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the amount of educational benefits for veterans under the Montgomery GI Bill.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

June 27, 2001

Mr. SPECTER introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the amount of educational benefits for veterans under the Montgomery GI Bill.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. INCREASE IN RATES OF BASIC EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE UNDER MONTGOMERY GI BILL.

(a) IN GENERAL- (1) Section 3015(a)(1) of title 38, United States Code , is amended to read as follows:

 “(1) for an approved program of education pursued on a full-time basis, at the monthly rate of--

 “(A) for months occurring during fiscal year 2002, $800,

 “(B) for months occurring during fiscal year 2003, $950,

 “(C) for months occurring during fiscal year 2004, $1,100, and “(D) for months occurring during a subsequent fiscal year, the amount for months occurring during the previous fiscal year increased under subsection (h); or’.

(2) Section 3015(b)(1) of such title is amended to read as follows:

 “(1) for an approved program of education pursued on a full-time basis, at the monthly rate of--

`(A) for months occurring during fiscal year 2002, $650,

`(B) for months occurring during fiscal year 2003, $772,
< /ul>

`(C) for months occurring during fiscal year 2004, $894, and

`(D) for months occurring during a subsequent fiscal year, the amount for months occurring during the previous fiscal year increased under subsection (h); or'.

(b) CPI ADJUSTMENT- No adjustment in rates of educational assistance shall be made under section 3015(h) of title 38, United States Code, for fiscal years 2002, 2003, and 2004.

Case Leaves Disabilities Activists Wary Of Bush Policy

By Sarah Schafer
Washington Post Staff Writer
Wednesday, August 8, 2001; Page E01

The Justice Department has filed a Supreme Court brief supporting a company that is being sued for allegedly discriminating against a woman with a disability, worrying some activists about the Bush administration's willingness to defend the rights of the disabled.

REV_00130906

In the brief, the solicitor general argues that a lower court used flawed reasoning to classify the woman as disabled. The brief further argues that the high court should send the case back to the lower court so it can reconsider its ruling.

Advocates for the disabled said that the Justice Department made good legal points. But they question why the administration took sides, filing a brief that favors the employer, Toyota Motor Manufacturing Kentucky Inc.

"They could have done it because they were being hyper-technical, or they could have done it because they were trying to pander in some way to the business community," said Chai Feldblum, a professor at the Georgetown University Law Center who helped draft the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990.

Many activists said they fear the latter. They are watching closely for how the Justice Department behaves in several upcoming cases. "This is one step in the wrong direction," Feldblum said.

Dan Nelson, a Justice Department spokesman, said that "the brief speaks for itself" and would not comment further.

The White House said it is committed to supporting the rights of disabled Americans.

"As you know, President Bush is a strong supporter of the Americans With Disabilities Act," said White House spokesman Scott Stanzel, adding that the president introduced an initiative early in his presidency to fund transportation for disabled workers and encourage companies to create technology to assist them at work, among other things. "President Bush will remain vigilant in protecting the rights of individuals with disabilities, and he is proud to support the ADA. His father signed that act into law."

But groups of advocates for the disabled, seniors, labor and others are closely watching the Bush administration for signs of how supportive it will be of their various causes. And many of the more liberal groups do not like what they see so far.

As a result, they are bracing for battle. They are recruiting more people to work at the grass-roots level, creating or beefing up lobbying arms, and -- like the disability rights groups -- becoming involved in lawsuits that could set precedents.

"I think you'll see battles royale in court," said one former Clinton Justice Department lawyer who is now in private practice and asked that his name not be used. "When the advocacy group and the administration basically agree, all of the fighting is within the family. . . . When [they disagree], all of the real action is in court."

For example, earlier this year, the AARP Foundation Litigation, an affiliate of AARP, a nonprofit advocacy group for people over 50, joined the legal battle against companies that force employees to sign agreements waiving their right to sue for employment discrimination. The group worried that these agreements would hurt older workers in particular. Until a recent Supreme Court ruling, the lower courts had not been consistent in deciding the legality of these agreements.

The liberal Alliance for Justice, a national association of environmental, civil rights, mental health, women's and other advocacy organizations, is trying to boost its grass-roots efforts. It's also creating a spinoff organization "that will give us a lot more leverage to lobby and really bring our issues full force to [Capitol] Hill," said Julie Bernstein, spokeswoman for the Alliance.

Already, several groups -- including the AFL-CIO, an umbrella group for more than 60 unions -- are preparing briefs to submit in favor of the worker in the Toyota case.

That case, which the Supreme Court will address this fall, deals with the scope of the Americans With Disabilities Act, which protects people with disabilities from various forms of discrimination, including on the job. Ella Williams, an assembly-line worker at a Toyota plant in Kentucky, claims in the lawsuit that she developed carpal tunnel syndrome from her job. She alleged that the company fired her in violation of the ADA when she refused a different job that would still require her to perform some manual labor.

Toyota claimed that it tried to accommodate Williams and that she should not be considered legally disabled anyway because she was unable to perform only some tasks. An appeals court sided with Williams, and the company appealed to the Supreme Court. The brief filed by the Justice Department does not address whether Williams is disabled. It simply contends that the lower court erred in the way it decided that she was.

Andrew Imparato of the American Association of People With Disabilities said his organization does not dispute the facts of the brief. But he called the administration's overt support of Toyota "unusual" and a departure from the Clinton era. "We want to make sure they go to bat for the ADA in the same way that the Clinton administration . . . went to bat for the ADA," he said, adding that Clinton had a far-from-perfect record on supporting the law.

To that end, the association has stepped up its activism efforts and become more litigious. Two months ago, it launched a project to protect the voting rights of the disabled. It has since sued several jurisdictions that have purchased voting equipment that is ill-equipped to handle, for example, the needs of blind voters.

"If the Justice Department were more active on that issue, we wouldn't have to do that," Imparato said.

Imparato's group has also been active in opposing several of Bush's federal court nominees who they claim take too narrow a view of who should receive protection under federal disability laws.

Imparato said he hasn't lost hope, however. He and others point out that the Justice Department has filed at least one other brief that supported the disabled party in a lawsuit. In addition, a few people were recently surprised to be invited into the White House to talk about their concerns with administration officials during a march on the White House by several hundred activists.

"There's a mixed message. . . . This administration has demonstrated support," said Marcie Roth, director of advocacy and public policy for the National Council on Independent Living, an Arlington-based organization for the disabled. "We remain ever vigilant."

Subject: White House counsel meeting with disability leaders

Alan Reich and Andy Imparato are available on Thursday, Aug. 23rd from 3 PM to 5 PM. (Michael Deland is on vacation) As we discussed, the first hour will be spent discussing President Bush's judicial nominees and the second hour Gian-Carlo and I will be available to discuss other issues. Unless I hear of any conflicts from you guys, I will proceed with inviting other disability leaders.

Thanks!
Jennifer

Great. I will try this morning to add my thoughts directly to the document, and then I'll recirculate to you and Brett to see if Brett has any others. After that, we should be ready to share it with the Judge.

I. No statutory authority for retroactive look for violations of conflict of interest law in certification process

A. Statutes and Regulations

1. OGE's statutory authority in review of reports does not contemplate a retrospective inquiry. The remedies are forward looking with no retroactive application. See 5 U.S.C. app. 106.

The statute and the implementing regulations contemplate a procedure for obtaining information where there are questions about the information supplied on the report. In connection with bringing an individual into compliance with conflicts laws and regulations, specific remedies are provided. These are all forward-looking.

2. The relevant regulations support the notion that review is not retroactive. See 5 CFR 2634.605. In particular, the regulations reflect that the review is aimed at whether the information on the report is complete and that "no interest or position disclosed on the form violates or appears to violate" conflicts laws and regulations. 605((b)(1)(ii). The process contemplates that additional information sought in connection with a report "shall be made part of the report." 605(b)(3). If a report is viewed as revealing violations of applicable laws and regulations, the reviewer is to contemplate the remedies under 605(b)(5) to assure compliance. These remedies are forward-looking.
3. OGE, by virtue of 5 U.S.C. app. 402(f)(5), can make no findings of criminality; OGE here makes certification contingent on a finding of non-criminality.

OGE will be likely to counter with the idea that they have wide ranging authority based on 5 U.S.C. app. 402(b)(4) and (b)(9) to identify conflicts of interest in connection with the review process and to look back and consider compliance with conflicts of interest law. This interpretation would negate the statutory and regulatory procedures.

B. Absence of authority results in arbitrary decisions to review and arbitrary review

1. What is OGE's standard for whether to look back into whether a conflict of interest law was violated (in connection with the certification process)? Anytime the press or a congressman complains of it? What did OGE do in connection with allegations of Health Care task force allegations of conflict?
2. What is the scope of the retrospective? Any and all theories must be investigated?

C. Certification made arbitrary by timing

1. Is certification a function of when the form is reviewed rather than what is on it?

(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no record developed pursuant to the authority of this section concerning an investigation of an individual for a violation of any rule, regulation, or Executive order relating to a conflict of interest shall be made available pursuant to section 552(a)(3) of title 5, United States Code, unless the request for such information identifies the individual to whom such records relate and the subject matter of any alleged violation to which such records relate, except that nothing in this subsection shall affect the application of the provisions of section 552(b) of title 5, United States Code, to any record so identified.

D. Congressional Subpoena

1. What protection does OGE have from Congressional subpoenas?

II. Process in the White House

A. Ethics Program

1. Ethics training and briefings.
2. Staff manual and issuance of other relevant policies, such as the contacts memo (limiting the scope of WH employee involvement in particular matters pending at agencies.)
3. SF278 review. Personalized counseling and written ethics advice: April 24 memo and May 16 memo.

B. Factual Review

1. Where we felt there was a specific question raised such as in connection with the Intel merger issue and Enron meeting, we dealt with them. Document review; witness interviews; questions directed to personal counsel. Conclusions that no indication of a violation that had occurred or was occurring based on our review. Confirmed knowledge of personal and substantial participation requirement.

2. 5 C.F.R 2634, Executive Branch Financial Disclosure5
Subpart F—Procedure: Sec. 2634.605 Review of reports.
3. 5 U.S.C. app. 402. Authority and functions7

5 U.S.C. app. 106 “Review of Reports” provides:

(a)(1) Each designated agency ethics official or Secretary concerned shall make provisions to ensure that each report filed with him under this title is reviewed within sixty days after the date of such filing, except that the Director of the Office of Government Ethics shall review only those reports required to be transmitted to him under this title within sixty days after the date of transmittal.

(2) Each congressional ethics committee and the Judicial Conference shall make provisions to ensure that each report filed under this title is reviewed within sixty days after the date of such filing.

(b)(1) If after reviewing any report under subsection (a), the Director of the Office of Government Ethics, the Secretary concerned, the designated agency ethics official, a person designated by the congressional ethics committee, or a person designated by the Judicial Conference, as the case may be, is of the opinion that on the basis of information contained in such report the individual submitting such report is in compliance with applicable laws and regulations, he shall state such opinion on the report, and shall sign such report.

(2) If the Director of the Office of Government Ethics, the Secretary concerned, the designated agency ethics official, a person designated by the congressional ethics committee, or a person designated by the Judicial Conference, after reviewing any report under subsection (a) –

(A) believes additional information is required to be submitted, he shall notify the individual submitting such report what additional information is required and the time by which it must be submitted, or

(B) is of the opinion, on the basis of information submitted, that the individual is not in compliance with applicable laws and regulations, he shall notify the individual, afford a reasonable opportunity for a written or oral response, and after consideration of such response, reach an opinion as to whether or not, on the basis of information submitted, the individual is in compliance with such laws and regulations.

(3) If the Director of the Office of Government Ethics, the Secretary concerned, the designated agency ethics official, a person designated by a congressional ethics committee, or a person designated by the Judicial Conference, reaches an opinion under paragraph (2)(B) that an individual is not in compliance with applicable laws and regulations, the official or committee shall notify the individual of that opinion and, after an opportunity for personal consultation (if practicable), determine and notify the individual of which steps, if any, would in the opinion of such official or committee be appropriate for assuring compliance with such laws and regulations and the date by which such steps should be taken. Such steps may include, as appropriate –

(A) divestiture,

(B) restitution,

(C) the establishment of a blind trust,

(D) request for an exemption under section 208(b) of title 18, United States Code, or

(E) voluntary request for transfer, reassignment, limitation of duties, or resignation.

The use of any such steps shall be in accordance with such rules or regulations as the supervising ethics office may prescribe.

(4) If steps for assuring compliance with applicable laws and regulations are not taken by the date set under paragraph (3) by an individual in a position in the executive branch (other than in the Foreign Service or the uniformed services), appointment to which requires the advice and consent of the Senate, the matter shall be referred to the President for appropriate action.

(5) If steps for assuring compliance with applicable laws and regulations are not taken by the date set under paragraph (3) by a member of the Foreign Service or the uniformed services, the Secretary concerned shall take appropriate action.

(6) If steps for assuring compliance with applicable laws and regulations are not taken by the date set under paragraph (3) by any other officer or employee, the matter shall be referred to the head of the appropriate agency, the congressional ethics committee, or the Judicial Conference, for appropriate action; except that in the case of the Postmaster General or Deputy Postmaster General, the Director of the Office of Government Ethics shall recommend to the Governors of the Board of Governors of the United States Postal Service the action to be taken.

(7) Each supervising ethics office may render advisory opinions interpreting this title within its respective jurisdiction.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the individual to whom a public advisory opinion is rendered in accordance with this paragraph, and any other individual covered by this title who is involved in a fact situation which is indistinguishable in all material aspects, and who acts in good faith in accordance with the provisions and findings of such advisory opinion shall not, as a result of such act, be subject to any penalty or sanction provided by this title.

Subpart F--Procedure

Sec. 2634.605 Review of reports.

(a) In general. The designated agency ethics official shall normally serve as the reviewing official for reports submitted to his agency. That responsibility may be delegated, except in the case of certification of nominee reports required by paragraph (c) of this section. See also Sec. 2634.105(q). He shall note on any report or supplemental report the date on which it is received. Except as indicated in paragraph (c) of this section, all reports shall be reviewed within 60 days after the date of filing. Reports reviewed by the Director of the Office of Government Ethics shall be reviewed within 60 days from the date on which they are received by that Office. Final certification in accordance with paragraph (b)(2) of this section may, of necessity, occur later, where additional information is being sought or remedial action is being taken under this section.

(b) Responsibilities of reviewing officials—

(1) Initial review. The reviewing official may request an intermediate review by the filer's supervisor. In the case of a filer who is detailed to another agency for more than 60 days during the reporting period, the reviewing official shall obtain an intermediate review by the agency where the filer served as a detailee. After obtaining any intermediate review or determining that such review is not required, the reviewing official shall examine the report to determine, to his satisfaction that:

(i) Each required item is completed; and

(ii) No interest or position disclosed on the form violates or appears to violate:

(A) Any applicable provision of chapter 11 of title 18, United States Code;

(B) The Act, as amended, and the implementing regulations;

(C) Executive Order 12674, as modified by Executive Order 12731, and the implementing regulations; or

(D) Any other agency-specific statute or regulation which governs the filer.

(2) Signature by reviewing official. If the reviewing official determines that the report meets the requirements of paragraph (b)(1) of this section, he shall certify it by signature and date. The reviewing official need not audit the report to ascertain whether the disclosures are correct. Disclosures shall be taken at "face value" as correct, unless there is a patent omission or ambiguity or the official has independent knowledge of matters outside the report. However, a report which is signed by a reviewing official certifies that the filer's agency has reviewed the report, and that the reviewing official has concluded that each required item has been completed and that on the basis of information contained in such report the filer is in compliance with applicable laws and regulations noted in paragraph (b)(1)(ii) of this section.

(3) Requests for, and review based on, additional information. If the reviewing official believes that additional information is required, he shall request that it be submitted by a specified date. This additional information shall be made a part of the report. If the reviewing official concludes, on the basis of the information disclosed in the report and any additional information submitted, that the report fulfills the requirements of paragraph (b)(1) of this section, the reviewing official shall sign and date the report.

(4) Compliance with applicable laws and regulations. If the reviewing official concludes that information disclosed in the report may reveal a violation of applicable laws and regulations as specified in paragraph (b)(1)(ii) of this section, the official shall:

(i) Notify the filer of that conclusion;
(ii) Afford the filer a reasonable opportunity for an oral or written response; and
(iii) Determine, after considering any response, whether or not the filer is then in compliance with applicable laws and regulations specified in paragraph (b)(1)(ii) of this section. If the reviewing official concludes that the report does fulfill the requirements, he shall sign and date the report. If he determines that it does not, he shall:

(A) Notify the filer of the conclusion;
(B) Afford the filer an opportunity for personal consultation if practicable;
(C) Determine what remedial action under paragraph (b)(5) of this section should be taken to bring the report into compliance with the requirements of paragraph (b)(1)(ii) of this section; and
(D) Notify the filer in writing of the remedial action which is needed, and the date by which such action should be taken.

(5) Remedial action.

(i) Except in unusual circumstances, which must be fully documented to the satisfaction of the reviewing official, remedial action shall be completed not later than three months from the date on which the filer received notice that the action is required.

(ii) Remedial action may include, as appropriate:

(A) Divestiture of a conflicting interest (see subpart J of this part);
(B) Resignation from a position with a non-Federal business or other entity;
(C) Restitution;
(D) Establishment of a qualified blind or diversified trust under the Act and subpart D of this part;
(E) Procurement of a waiver under 18 U.S.C. 208(b)(1) or (b)(3);
(F) Preparation of a written instrument of recusal (disqualification); or
(G) Voluntary request by the filer for transfer, reassignment, limitation of duties, or resignation.

(6) Compliance or referral.

(i) If the filer complies with a written request for remedial action under paragraph (b)(4) of this section, the reviewing official shall indicate, in the comment section of the report, what remedial action has been taken. The official shall also sign and date the report.

(ii) If the filer does not comply by the designated date with the written request for remedial action transmitted under paragraph (b)(4) of this section, the reviewing official shall, in the case of a public filer under subpart B of this part, notify the head of the agency and the Office of Government Ethics, for appropriate action. Where the filer is in a position in the executive branch (other than in the uniformed services or the Foreign Service), appointment to which requires the advice and consent of the Senate, the Director of the Office of Government Ethics shall refer the matter to the President. In the case of the Postmaster General or Deputy Postmaster General, the Director of the Office of Government Ethics shall recommend to the Governors of the Board of Governors of the United States Postal Service the action to be taken. For confidential filers, the reviewing official will follow agency procedures.

Sec. 402. Authority and functions

(a) The Director shall provide, in consultation with the Office of Personnel Management, overall direction of executive branch policies related to preventing conflicts of interest on the part of officers and employees of any executive agency, as defined in section 105 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) The responsibilities of the Director shall include -

(1) developing, in consultation with the Attorney General and the Office of Personnel Management, rules and regulations to be promulgated by the President or the Director pertaining to conflicts of interest and ethics in the executive branch, including rules and regulations establishing procedures for the filing, review, and public availability of financial statements filed by officers and employees in the executive branch as required by title II of this Act;

(2) developing, in consultation with the Attorney General and the Office of Personnel Management, rules and regulations to be promulgated by the President or the Director pertaining to the identification and resolution of conflicts of interest;

(3) monitoring and investigating compliance with the public financial disclosure requirements of title II of this Act by officers and employees of the executive branch and executive agency officials responsible for receiving, reviewing, and making available financial statements filed pursuant to such title;

(4) conducting a review of financial statements to determine whether such statements reveal possible violations of applicable conflict of interest laws or regulations and recommending appropriate action to correct any conflict of interest or ethical problems revealed by such review;

(5) monitoring and investigating individual and agency compliance with any additional financial reporting and internal review requirements established by law for the executive branch;

(6) interpreting rules and regulations issued by the President or the Director governing conflict of interest and ethical problems and the filing of financial statements;

(7) consulting, when requested, with agency ethics counselors and other responsible officials regarding the resolution of conflict of interest problems in individual cases;

(8) establishing a formal advisory opinion service whereby advisory opinions are rendered on matters of general applicability or on important matters of first impression after, to the extent practicable, providing interested parties with an opportunity to transmit written comments with respect to the request for such advisory opinion, and whereby such advisory opinions are compiled, published, and made available to agency ethics counselors and the public;

(9) ordering corrective action on the part of agencies and employees which the Director deems necessary;

(10) requiring such reports from executive agencies as the Director deems necessary;

(11) assisting the Attorney General in evaluating the effectiveness of the conflict of interest laws and in recommending appropriate amendments;

(12) evaluating, with the assistance of the Attorney General and the Office of Personnel Management, the need for changes in rules and regulations issued by the Director and the agencies regarding conflict of interest and ethical problems, with a view toward making such rules and regulations consistent with and an effective supplement to the conflict of interest laws;

(13) cooperating with the Attorney General in developing an effective system for reporting allegations of violations of the conflict of interest laws to the Attorney General, as required by section 535 of title 28, United States Code;

(14) providing information on and promoting understanding of ethical standards in executive agencies; and

(15) developing, in consultation with the Office of Personnel Management, and promulgating such rules and regulations as the Director determines necessary or desirable with respect to the evaluation of any item required to be reported by title II of this Act.

(c) In the development of policies, rules, regulations, procedures, and forms to be recommended, authorized, or prescribed by him, the Director shall consult when appropriate with the executive agencies affected and with the Attorney General.

(d)(1) The Director shall, by the exercise of any authority otherwise available to the Director under this title, ensure that each executive agency has established written procedures relating to how the agency is to collect, review, evaluate, and, if applicable, make publicly available, financial disclosure statements filed by any of its officers or employees.

(2) In carrying out paragraph (1), the Director shall ensure that each agency's procedures are in conformance with all applicable requirements, whether established by law, rule, regulation, or Executive order.

(e) In carrying out subsection (b)(10), the Director shall prescribe regulations under which -

(1) each executive agency shall be required to submit to the Office an annual report containing -

(A) a description and evaluation of the agency's ethics program, including any educational, counseling, or other services provided to officers and employees, in effect during the period covered by the report; and

(B) the position title and duties of -

(i) each official who was designated by the agency head to have primary responsibility for the administration, coordination, and management of the agency's ethics program during any portion of the period covered by the report; and

(ii) each officer or employee who was designated to serve as an alternate to the official having primary responsibility during any portion of such period; and

(C) any other information that the Director may require in order to carry out the responsibilities of the Director under this title; and

(2) each executive agency shall be required to inform the Director upon referral of any alleged violation of Federal conflict of interest law to the Attorney General pursuant to section 535 of title 28, United States Code, except that nothing under this paragraph shall require any notification or disclosure which would otherwise be prohibited by law.

(f)(1) In carrying out subsection (b)(9) with respect to executive agencies, the Director -

(A) may -

(i) order specific corrective action on the part of an agency based on the failure of such agency to establish a system for the collection, filing, review, and, when applicable, public inspection of financial disclosure statements, in accordance with applicable requirements, or to modify an existing system in order to meet applicable requirements; or

(ii) order specific corrective action involving the establishment or modification of an agency ethics program (other than with respect to any matter under clause (i)) in accordance with applicable requirements; and

(B) shall, if an agency has not complied with an order under subparagraph (A) within a reasonable period of time, notify the President and the Congress of the agency's noncompliance in writing (including, with the notification, any written comments which the agency may provide).

(2)(A) In carrying out subsection (b)(9) with respect to individual officers and employees -

(i) the Director may make such recommendations and provide such advice to such officers and employees as the Director considers necessary to ensure compliance with rules, regulations, and Executive orders relating to conflicts of interest or standards of conduct;

(ii) if the Director has reason to believe that an officer or employee is violating, or has violated, any rule, regulation, or Executive order relating to conflicts of interest or standards of conduct, the Director -

(I) may recommend to the head of the officer's or employee's agency that such agency head investigate the possible violation and, if the agency head finds such a violation, that such agency head take any appropriate disciplinary action (such as reprimand, suspension, demotion, or dismissal) against the officer or employee, except that, if the officer or employee involved is the agency head, any such recommendation shall instead be submitted to the President; and

(II) shall notify the President in writing if the Director determines that the head of an agency has not conducted an investigation pursuant to subclause (I) within a reasonable time after the Director recommends such action;

(iii) if the Director finds that an officer or employee is violating any rule, regulation, or Executive order relating to conflicts of interest or standards of conduct, the Director -

(I) may order the officer or employee to take specific action (such as divestiture, recusal, or the establishment of a blind trust) to end such violation; and

(II) shall, if the officer or employee has not complied with the order under subclause (I) within a reasonable period of time, notify, in writing, the head of the officer's or employee's agency of the officer's or employee's noncompliance, except that, if the officer or employee involved is the agency head, the notification shall instead be submitted to the President; and

(iv) if the Director finds that an officer or employee is violating, or has violated, any rule, regulation, or Executive order relating to conflicts of interest or standards of conduct, the Director

(I) may recommend to the head of the officer's or employee's agency that appropriate disciplinary action (such as reprimand, suspension, demotion, or dismissal) be brought against the officer or employee, except that if the officer or employee involved is the agency head, any such recommendations shall instead be submitted to the President; and

(II) may notify the President in writing if the Director determines that the head of an agency has not taken appropriate disciplinary action within a reasonable period of time after the Director recommends such action.

(B)(i) In order to carry out the Director's duties and responsibilities under subparagraph (A)(iii) or (iv) with respect to individual officers and employees, the Director may conduct investigations and make findings concerning possible violations of any rule, regulation, or Executive order relating to conflicts of interest or standards of conduct applicable to officers and employees of the executive branch.

(ii)(I) Subject to clause (iv) of this subparagraph, before any finding is made under subparagraphs (A)(iii) or (iv), the officer or employee involved shall be afforded notification of the alleged violation, and an opportunity to comment, either orally or in writing, on the alleged violation.

(II) The Director shall, in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, establish procedures for such notification and comment.

(iii) Subject to clause (iv) of this subparagraph, before any action is ordered under subparagraph (A)(iii), the officer or employee involved shall be afforded an opportunity for a hearing, if requested by such officer or employee, except that any such hearing shall be conducted on the record.

(iv) The procedures described in clauses (ii) and (iii) of this subparagraph do not apply to findings or orders for action made to obtain compliance with the financial disclosure requirements in title 2 (FOOTNOTE 1) of this Act. For those findings and orders, the procedures in section 206 of this Act shall apply.

(FOOTNOTE 1) So in original. Probably should be title "II".

(3) The Director shall send a copy of any order under paragraph (2)(A)(iii) to -

(A) the officer or employee who is the subject of such order; and

(B) the head of officer's or employee's agency or, if such officer or employee is the agency head, to the President.

(4) For purposes of paragraphs (2)(A)(ii), (iii), (iv), and (3)(B), in the case of an officer or employee within an agency which is headed by a board, committee, or other group of individuals (rather than by a single individual), any notification, recommendation, or other matter which would otherwise be sent to an agency head shall instead be sent to the officer's or employee's appointing authority.

(5) Nothing in this title shall be considered to allow the Director (or any designee) to make any finding that a provision of title 18, United States Code, or any criminal law of the United States outside of such title, has been or is being violated.

C. Certification made arbitrary by timing

1. Is certification a function of when the form is reviewed rather than what is on it?

(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no record developed pursuant to the authority of this section concerning an investigation of an individual for a violation of any rule, regulation, or Executive order relating to a conflict of interest shall be made available pursuant to section 552(a)(3) of title 5, United States Code, unless the request for such information identifies the individual to whom such records relate and the subject matter of any alleged violation to which such records relate, except that nothing in this subsection shall affect the application of the provisions of section 552(b) of title 5, United States Code, to any record so identified.

D. Congressional Subpoena

1. What protection does OGE have from Congressional subpoenas?

II. Process in the White House

A. Ethics Program

1. Ethics training and briefings.
2. Staff manual and issuance of other relevant policies, such as the contacts memo (limiting the scope of WH employee involvement in particular matters pending at agencies.)
3. SF278 review. Personalized counseling and written ethics advice: April 24 memo and May 16 memo.

B. Factual Review

1. Where we felt there was a specific question raised such as in connection with the Intel merger issue and Enron meeting, we dealt with them. Document review; witness interviews; questions directed to personal counsel. Conclusions that no indication of a violation that had occurred or was occurring based on our review. Confirmed knowledge of personal and substantial participation requirement.

Subpart F—Procedure: Sec. 2634.605 Review of reports.
3. 5 U.S.C. app. 402. Authority and functions7

5 U.S.C. app. 106 “Review of Reports” provides:

(a)(1) Each designated agency ethics official or Secretary concerned shall make provisions to ensure that each report filed with him under this title is reviewed within sixty days after the date of such filing, except that the Director of the Office of Government Ethics shall review only those reports required to be transmitted to him under this title within sixty days after the date of transmittal.

(2) Each congressional ethics committee and the Judicial Conference shall make provisions to ensure that each report filed under this title is reviewed within sixty days after the date of such filing.

(b)(1) If after reviewing any report under subsection (a), the Director of the Office of Government Ethics, the Secretary concerned, the designated agency ethics official, a person designated by the congressional ethics committee, or a person designated by the Judicial Conference, as the case may be, is of the opinion that on the basis of information contained in such report the individual submitting such report is in compliance with applicable laws and regulations, he shall state such opinion on the report, and shall sign such report.

(2) If the Director of the Office of Government Ethics, the Secretary concerned, the designated agency ethics official, a person designated by the congressional ethics committee, or a person designated by the Judicial Conference, after reviewing any report under subsection (a) –

(A) believes additional information is required to be submitted, he shall notify the individual submitting such report what additional information is required and the time by which it must be submitted, or

(B) is of the opinion, on the basis of information submitted, that the individual is not in compliance with applicable laws and regulations, he shall notify the individual, afford a reasonable opportunity for a written or oral response, and after consideration of such response, reach an opinion as to whether or not, on the basis of information submitted, the individual is in compliance with such laws and regulations.

(3) If the Director of the Office of Government Ethics, the Secretary concerned, the designated agency ethics official, a person designated by a congressional ethics committee, or a person designated by the Judicial Conference, reaches an opinion under paragraph (2)(B) that an individual is not in compliance with applicable laws and regulations, the official or committee shall notify the individual of that opinion and, after an opportunity for personal consultation (if practicable), determine and notify the individual of which steps, if any, would in the opinion of such official or committee be appropriate for assuring compliance with such laws and regulations and the date by which such steps should be taken. Such steps may include, as appropriate –

(A) divestiture,

(B) restitution,

(C) the establishment of a blind trust,

(D) request for an exemption under section 208(b) of title 18, United States Code, or

(E) voluntary request for transfer, reassignment, limitation of duties, or resignation.

The use of any such steps shall be in accordance with such rules or regulations as the supervising ethics office may prescribe.

(4) If steps for assuring compliance with applicable laws and regulations are not taken by the date set under paragraph (3) by an individual in a position in the executive branch (other than in the Foreign Service or the uniformed services), appointment to which requires the advice and consent of the Senate, the matter shall be referred to the President for appropriate action.

(5) If steps for assuring compliance with applicable laws and regulations are not taken by the date set under paragraph (3) by a member of the Foreign Service or the uniformed services, the Secretary concerned shall take appropriate action.

(6) If steps for assuring compliance with applicable laws and regulations are not taken by the date set under paragraph (3) by any other officer or employee, the matter shall be referred to the head of the appropriate agency, the congressional ethics committee, or the Judicial Conference, for appropriate action; except that in the case of the Postmaster General or Deputy Postmaster General, the Director of the Office of Government Ethics shall recommend to the Governors of the Board of Governors of the United States Postal Service the action to be taken.

(7) Each supervising ethics office may render advisory opinions interpreting this title within its respective jurisdiction.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the individual to whom a public advisory opinion is rendered in accordance with this paragraph, and any other individual covered by this title who is involved in a fact situation which is indistinguishable in all material aspects, and who acts in good faith in accordance with the provisions and findings of such advisory opinion shall not, as a result of such act, be subject to any penalty or sanction provided by this title.

Subpart F--Procedure

Sec. 2634.605 Review of reports.

(a) In general. The designated agency ethics official shall normally serve as the reviewing official for reports submitted to his agency. That responsibility may be delegated, except in the case of certification of nominee reports required by paragraph (c) of this section. See also Sec. 2634.105(q). He shall note on any report or supplemental report the date on which it is received. Except as indicated in paragraph (c) of this section, all reports shall be reviewed within 60 days after the date of filing. Reports reviewed by the Director of the Office of Government Ethics shall be reviewed within 60 days from the date on which they are received by that Office. Final certification in accordance with paragraph (b)(2) of this section may, of necessity, occur later, where additional information is being sought or remedial action is being taken under this section.

(b) Responsibilities of reviewing officials—

(1) Initial review. The reviewing official may request an intermediate review by the filer's supervisor. In the case of a filer who is detailed to another agency for more than 60 days during the reporting period, the reviewing official shall obtain an intermediate review by the agency where the filer served as a detailee. After obtaining any intermediate review or determining that such review is not required, the reviewing official shall examine the report to determine, to his satisfaction that:

(i) Each required item is completed; and

(ii) No interest or position disclosed on the form violates or appears to violate:

(A) Any applicable provision of chapter 11 of title 18, United States Code;

(B) The Act, as amended, and the implementing regulations;

(C) Executive Order 12674, as modified by Executive Order 12731, and the implementing regulations; or

(D) Any other agency-specific statute or regulation which governs the filer.

(2) Signature by reviewing official. If the reviewing official determines that the report meets the requirements of paragraph (b)(1) of this section, he shall certify it by signature and date. The reviewing official need not audit the report to ascertain whether the disclosures are correct. Disclosures shall be taken at "face value" as correct, unless there is a patent omission or ambiguity or the official has independent knowledge of matters outside the report. However, a report which is signed by a reviewing official certifies that the filer's agency has reviewed the report, and that the reviewing official has concluded that each required item has been completed and that on the basis of information contained in such report the filer is in compliance with applicable laws and regulations noted in paragraph (b)(1)(ii) of this section.

(3) Requests for, and review based on, additional information. If the reviewing official believes that additional information is required, he shall request that it be submitted by a specified date. This additional information shall be made a part of the report. If the reviewing official concludes, on the basis of the information disclosed in the report and any additional information submitted, that the report fulfills the requirements of paragraph (b)(1) of this section, the reviewing official shall sign and date the report.

(4) Compliance with applicable laws and regulations. If the reviewing official concludes that information disclosed in the report may reveal a violation of applicable laws and regulations as specified in paragraph (b)(1)(ii) of this section, the official shall:

(i) Notify the filer of that conclusion;
(ii) Afford the filer a reasonable opportunity for an oral or written response; and
(iii) Determine, after considering any response, whether or not the filer is then in compliance with applicable laws and regulations specified in paragraph (b)(1)(ii) of this section. If the reviewing official concludes that the report does fulfill the requirements, he shall sign and date the report. If he determines that it does not, he shall:

(A) Notify the filer of the conclusion;
(B) Afford the filer an opportunity for personal consultation if practicable;
(C) Determine what remedial action under paragraph (b)(5) of this section should be taken to bring the report into compliance with the requirements of paragraph (b)(1)(ii) of this section; and
(D) Notify the filer in writing of the remedial action which is needed, and the date by which such action should be taken.

(5) Remedial action.

(i) Except in unusual circumstances, which must be fully documented to the satisfaction of the reviewing official, remedial action shall be completed not later than three months from the date on which the filer received notice that the action is required.

(ii) Remedial action may include, as appropriate:

(A) Divestiture of a conflicting interest (see subpart J of this part);
(B) Resignation from a position with a non-Federal business or other entity;
(C) Restitution;
(D) Establishment of a qualified blind or diversified trust under the Act and subpart D of this part;
(E) Procurement of a waiver under 18 U.S.C. 208(b)(1) or (b)(3);
(F) Preparation of a written instrument of recusal (disqualification); or
(G) Voluntary request by the filer for transfer, reassignment, limitation of duties, or resignation.

(6) Compliance or referral.

(i) If the filer complies with a written request for remedial action under paragraph (b)(4) of this section, the reviewing official shall indicate, in the comment section of the report, what remedial action has been taken. The official shall also sign and date the report.

(ii) If the filer does not comply by the designated date with the written request for remedial action transmitted under paragraph (b)(4) of this section, the reviewing official shall, in the case of a public filer under subpart B of this part, notify the head of the agency and the Office of Government Ethics, for appropriate action. Where the filer is in a position in the executive branch (other than in the uniformed services or the Foreign Service), appointment to which requires the advice and consent of the Senate, the Director of the Office of Government Ethics shall refer the matter to the President. In the case of the Postmaster General or Deputy Postmaster General, the Director of the Office of Government Ethics shall recommend to the Governors of the Board of Governors of the United States Postal Service the action to be taken. For confidential filers, the reviewing official will follow agency procedures.

Sec. 402. Authority and functions

(a) The Director shall provide, in consultation with the Office of Personnel Management, overall direction of executive branch policies related to preventing conflicts of interest on the part of officers and employees of any executive agency, as defined in section 105 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) The responsibilities of the Director shall include -

(1) developing, in consultation with the Attorney General and the Office of Personnel Management, rules and regulations to be promulgated by the President or the Director pertaining to conflicts of interest and ethics in the executive branch, including rules and regulations establishing procedures for the filing, review, and public availability of financial statements filed by officers and employees in the executive branch as required by title II of this Act;

(2) developing, in consultation with the Attorney General and the Office of Personnel Management, rules and regulations to be promulgated by the President or the Director pertaining to the identification and resolution of conflicts of interest;

(3) monitoring and investigating compliance with the public financial disclosure requirements of title II of this Act by officers and employees of the executive branch and executive agency officials responsible for receiving, reviewing, and making available financial statements filed pursuant to such title;

(4) conducting a review of financial statements to determine whether such statements reveal possible violations of applicable conflict of interest laws or regulations and recommending appropriate action to correct any conflict of interest or ethical problems revealed by such review;

(5) monitoring and investigating individual and agency compliance with any additional financial reporting and internal review requirements established by law for the executive branch;

(6) interpreting rules and regulations issued by the President or the Director governing conflict of interest and ethical problems and the filing of financial statements;

(7) consulting, when requested, with agency ethics counselors and other responsible officials regarding the resolution of conflict of interest problems in individual cases;

(8) establishing a formal advisory opinion service whereby advisory opinions are rendered on matters of general applicability or on important matters of first impression after, to the extent practicable, providing interested parties with an opportunity to transmit written comments with respect to the request for such advisory opinion, and whereby such advisory opinions are compiled, published, and made available to agency ethics counselors and the public;

(9) ordering corrective action on the part of agencies and employees which the Director deems necessary;

(10) requiring such reports from executive agencies as the Director deems necessary;

(11) assisting the Attorney General in evaluating the effectiveness of the conflict of interest laws and in recommending appropriate amendments;

(12) evaluating, with the assistance of the Attorney General and the Office of Personnel Management, the need for changes in rules and regulations issued by the Director and the agencies regarding conflict of interest and ethical problems, with a view toward making such rules and regulations consistent with and an effective supplement to the conflict of interest laws;

(13) cooperating with the Attorney General in developing an effective system for reporting allegations of violations of the conflict of interest laws to the Attorney General, as required by section 535 of title 28, United States Code;

(14) providing information on and promoting understanding of ethical standards in executive agencies; and

(15) developing, in consultation with the Office of Personnel Management, and promulgating such rules and regulations as the Director determines necessary or desirable with respect to the evaluation of any item required to be reported by title II of this Act.

(c) In the development of policies, rules, regulations, procedures, and forms to be recommended, authorized, or prescribed by him, the Director shall consult when appropriate with the executive agencies affected and with the Attorney General.

(d)(1) The Director shall, by the exercise of any authority otherwise available to the Director under this title, ensure that each executive agency has established written procedures relating to how the agency is to collect, review, evaluate, and, if applicable, make publicly available, financial disclosure statements filed by any of its officers or employees.

(2) In carrying out paragraph (1), the Director shall ensure that each agency's procedures are in conformance with all applicable requirements, whether established by law, rule, regulation, or Executive order.

(e) In carrying out subsection (b)(10), the Director shall prescribe regulations under which -

(1) each executive agency shall be required to submit to the Office an annual report containing -

(A) a description and evaluation of the agency's ethics program, including any educational, counseling, or other services provided to officers and employees, in effect during the period covered by the report; and

(B) the position title and duties of -

(i) each official who was designated by the agency head to have primary responsibility for the administration, coordination, and management of the agency's ethics program during any portion of the period covered by the report; and

(ii) each officer or employee who was designated to serve as an alternate to the official having primary responsibility during any portion of such period; and

(C) any other information that the Director may require in order to carry out the responsibilities of the Director under this title; and

(2) each executive agency shall be required to inform the Director upon referral of any alleged violation of Federal conflict of interest law to the Attorney General pursuant to section 535 of title 28, United States Code, except that nothing under this paragraph shall require any notification or disclosure which would otherwise be prohibited by law.

(f)(1) In carrying out subsection (b)(9) with respect to executive agencies, the Director -

(A) may -

(i) order specific corrective action on the part of an agency based on the failure of such agency to establish a system for the collection, filing, review, and, when applicable, public inspection of financial disclosure statements, in accordance with applicable requirements, or to modify an existing system in order to meet applicable requirements; or

(ii) order specific corrective action involving the establishment or modification of an agency ethics program (other than with respect to any matter under clause (i)) in accordance with applicable requirements; and

(B) shall, if an agency has not complied with an order under subparagraph (A) within a reasonable period of time, notify the President and the Congress of the agency's noncompliance in writing (including, with the notification, any written comments which the agency may provide).

(2)(A) In carrying out subsection (b)(9) with respect to individual officers and employees -

(i) the Director may make such recommendations and provide such advice to such officers and employees as the Director considers necessary to ensure compliance with rules, regulations, and Executive orders relating to conflicts of interest or standards of conduct;

(ii) if the Director has reason to believe that an officer or employee is violating, or has violated, any rule, regulation, or Executive order relating to conflicts of interest or standards of conduct, the Director -

(I) may recommend to the head of the officer's or employee's agency that such agency head investigate the possible violation and, if the agency head finds such a violation, that such agency head take any appropriate disciplinary action (such as reprimand, suspension, demotion, or dismissal) against the officer or employee, except that, if the officer or employee involved is the agency head, any such recommendation shall instead be submitted to the President; and

(II) shall notify the President in writing if the Director determines that the head of an agency has not conducted an investigation pursuant to subclause (I) within a reasonable time after the Director recommends such action;

(iii) if the Director finds that an officer or employee is violating any rule, regulation, or Executive order relating to conflicts of interest or standards of conduct, the Director -

(I) may order the officer or employee to take specific action (such as divestiture, recusal, or the establishment of a blind trust) to end such violation; and

(II) shall, if the officer or employee has not complied with the order under subclause (I) within a reasonable period of time, notify, in writing, the head of the officer's or employee's agency of the officer's or employee's noncompliance, except that, if the officer or employee involved is the agency head, the notification shall instead be submitted to the President; and

(iv) if the Director finds that an officer or employee is violating, or has violated, any rule, regulation, or Executive order relating to conflicts of interest or standards of conduct, the Director

(I) may recommend to the head of the officer's or employee's agency that appropriate disciplinary action (such as reprimand, suspension, demotion, or dismissal) be brought against the officer or employee, except that if the officer or employee involved is the agency head, any such recommendations shall instead be submitted to the President; and

(II) may notify the President in writing if the Director determines that the head of an agency has not taken appropriate disciplinary action within a reasonable period of time after the Director recommends such action.

(B)(i) In order to carry out the Director's duties and responsibilities under subparagraph (A)(iii) or (iv) with respect to individual officers and employees, the Director may conduct investigations and make findings concerning possible violations of any rule, regulation, or Executive order relating to conflicts of interest or standards of conduct applicable to officers and employees of the executive branch.

(ii)(I) Subject to clause (iv) of this subparagraph, before any finding is made under subparagraphs (A)(iii) or (iv), the officer or employee involved shall be afforded notification of the alleged violation, and an opportunity to comment, either orally or in writing, on the alleged violation.

(II) The Director shall, in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, establish procedures for such notification and comment.

(iii) Subject to clause (iv) of this subparagraph, before any action is ordered under subparagraph (A)(iii), the officer or employee involved shall be afforded an opportunity for a hearing, if requested by such officer or employee, except that any such hearing shall be conducted on the record.

(iv) The procedures described in clauses (ii) and (iii) of this subparagraph do not apply to findings or orders for action made to obtain compliance with the financial disclosure requirements in title 2 (FOOTNOTE 1) of this Act. For those findings and orders, the procedures in section 206 of this Act shall apply.

(FOOTNOTE 1) So in original. Probably should be title "II".

(3) The Director shall send a copy of any order under paragraph (2)(A)(iii) to -

(A) the officer or employee who is the subject of such order; and

(B) the head of officer's or employee's agency or, if such officer or employee is the agency head, to the President.

(4) For purposes of paragraphs (2)(A)(ii), (iii), (iv), and (3)(B), in the case of an officer or employee within an agency which is headed by a board, committee, or other group of individuals (rather than by a single individual), any notification, recommendation, or other matter which would otherwise be sent to an agency head shall instead be sent to the officer's or employee's appointing authority.

(5) Nothing in this title shall be considered to allow the Director (or any designee) to make any finding that a provision of title 18, United States Code, or any criminal law of the United States outside of such title, has been or is being violated.

Post bats for Bush?

2001 WorldNetDaily.com

Recent research has exposed the liberal bias of the American Bar Association in evaluating candidates for nomination to the federal bench. The media establishment is just as biased. Standing today at 107, judicial vacancies have not been higher since March 1994. The Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts considers 40 of these vacancies "judicial emergencies" because they have been open so long or because the workload on those courts is so high. President Bush is doing his part, sending his first judicial nominees to the Senate months earlier than previous new presidents. They are highly qualified; even that liberal, biased ABA has given them all good ratings. Even so, the Democrat Senate has confirmed just four of his 44 nominees so far this year. So at least the title of the liberal Washington Post's Aug. 12 editorial ??? "Time for Some Judges" ??? seemed welcome indeed. After all, the Post had aggressively dogged the Republican Senate in recent years for supposedly blocking Clinton nominees. On Sept. 8, 1998, with just 72 judicial vacancies, for example, the Post said the Senate "should not shirk its constitutional obligation either to consent to the president's nominees or reject them." On Sept. 1, 1999, the Post again said, "While the Senate is entitled to reject a nomination, it is highly improper for it either to refuse or to neglect to perform its constitutional obligation to consider them." The Post blasted the Republican Senate's confirmation record, noting there had been just 11 confirmations so far that year and that 68 judicial positions were then vacant. And just three weeks later, the Post editorialized that "the Senate ends up abdicating responsibility when the majority leader denies nominees a timely vote." With vacancies more than 50 percent higher and confirmations so far this year nearly 70 percent lower, the Post was now saying it is "time for some judges." Maybe, just maybe, here was some fairness and non-partisanship. Not so fast. The editorial's opening sentence said nothing about judicial vacancies, nothing about the Senate's constitutional obligation to process nominees, nothing about the burgeoning caseloads in courts around the country. In fact, it said nothing about Senate

Democrats at all but, as if this were still 1998 or 1999, attacked Senate Republicans. Old habits die hard. Though Republicans no longer run the judicial confirmation process (they really didn't run it while in the majority either, but that's another column), still the Post attacks them:

"The position of Senate Republicans on judicial nominations is steeped in sanctimony. ??? [T]hey have spent the months since President Bush's election howling with rage that Democrats might do as they did." It's tough to imagine Republicans howling with rage about anything, but this nonsense just isn't true. Democrats have always been more aggressive than Republicans in the confirmation process. Democrats have denied more nominees Judiciary Committee hearings, defeated more nominees in committee, filibustered more nominees and refused full Senate votes on more nominees. Last year, the Republican Senate closed the Clinton presidency by sending back 42 judicial nominees they did not or could not consider. In 1992, the Democrat Senate closed the Bush presidency by sending back 55 nominees. When Democrats run the Senate, they confirm an average of 65 Democrat nominees and 47 Republican nominees per year, a partisan differential of 18. When Republicans run the Senate, they confirm an average of 49 Republican nominees and 41 Democrat nominees per year, a partisan differential of just eight. But I digress with the facts. In that Sept. 1, 1999, editorial quoted above, the Post said that 11 confirmations and 68 vacancies was "a record Senators would do well to alter." Now, with only four confirmations and 107 vacancies, the Post says these "apparently ominous numbers are somewhat deceptive." While the first paragraph attacked Republicans for their slow confirmation pace in the past, the second paragraph makes excuses for Democrats' slower confirmation pace in the present. Poor Sen. Leahy, the Post coos and clucks, he's had a lot of other things to do. He's doing his best. The Post never mentions this is the same Sen. Leahy who supported filibusters against Republican nominees in the 1980s. The Post never mentions Leahy's vow to hold only one nominee hearing per month with no more than three nominees per hearing. The Post never mentions that Republicans included an average of nearly six nominees per hearing during the last few years of their majority. The Post does set out a "rough test" for Leahy and the Democrat majority: "whether a year from now, any of the nominees before his committee are still waiting to be considered and whether ??? in that time ??? the number of vacancies has dropped substantially." Don't bet on it. The last time a Democrat Senate faced a first-year Bush presidency, it set the modern record for the fewest judicial confirmations, approving just 15 in 1989. Democrats are on track for breaking that record this year. Here's a "rough test" for the Post in its begrudging, teeth-grinding effort to at least appear balanced. In May 1998, the Post called the 38 percent vacancy rate on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit a "crisis." It editorialized that "one might expect the Senate leadership to act speedily to confirm the ??? nominees ??? already named" to fill some of them. Well, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has the same vacancy rate today and President Bush has made nominations to fill some of the empty positions. Will the Post call upon the Senate leadership "speedily to confirm" them? Don't hold your breath.

President Protects Social Security and U.S. Economy

Tax and Spending Increases Would Threaten Both

➤ The Big Picture

- ✓ Our government fiscal condition is strong and sound.
- ✓ We have our second largest surplus in history, despite the economic slowdown that started last year.
- ✓ We are paying down historic levels of debt – about $2 trillion over 10 years.
- ✓ President Bush will continue to ensure that every penny collected for Social Security and Medicare will be spent on Social Security and Medicare.
- ✓ Economists see encouraging signs of economic recovery, crediting tax relief and interest rate cuts.

➤ Scare Tactics Won't Work

- ✓ Unfortunately, some Democrats are trying to scare the American people about the budget. They opposed tax relief, and now want to raise taxes so they can spend more. Last year alone, Congress overspent its own budget to the tune of $34.5 billion.
- ✓ Raising taxes is the wrong thing to do in this economic environment. The right things for a weak economy are tax relief and restrained spending. The President took the first and best step to help the economy with tax relief that leading economists say is already providing relief for the ailing economy.
- ✓ Congressional Democrats now say the tax cut harms Social Security. Yet in March – just five months ago -- the Senate Majority Leader proposed a tax cut that would have had an even bigger impact on 2002 revenues than the President's final package.

➤ Accounting for Accuracy

Looking Back

- This Administration is reporting Social Security surpluses accurately. Accounting methods that report revenues for the budget year in which they actually were collected is responsible. American companies are required to accurately report revenues to their shareholders, and the federal government should report accurate figures for taxpayers, too.
- ✓ The accounting change is an accurate reflection of Social Security receipts in 1998, 1999, and 2000.
- ✓ This change will properly credit $5.6 billion to the Social Security Trust Fund. The former accounting practice used up to this point short-changed the Social Security Trust Fund of deserved interest. The change the Administration is making will correct this in the future.

Looking Ahead

- The economic growth projections used by the Administration are conservative and in line with respected Wall Street economists.
- ✓ For example, the Administration projects 3.2 percent economic growth in 2002 – and The Conference Board -- the group that won the Blue Chip Award last year for most accurate forecasting – mirrors that projection exactly with a 3.2 percent growth prediction. Another respected forecaster -- Merrill Lynch -- predicts 3.5 percent growth in 2002, and core Blue Chip panelist projections range from 2 to 3.7 percent growth.
- Future surpluses depend on future economic growth. The biggest threat to the economy, the surplus, paying down debt, and important programs like Social Security and Medicare is reckless spending.

President Protects Social Security and U.S. Economy

Tax and Spending Increases Would Threaten Both

➤ The Big Picture

- ✓ Our government fiscal condition is strong and sound.
- ✓ We have our second largest surplus in history, despite the economic slowdown that started last year.
- ✓ We are paying down historic levels of debt – about $2 trillion over 10 years.
- ✓ President Bush will continue to ensure that every penny collected for Social Security and Medicare will be spent on Social Security and Medicare.
- ✓ Economists see encouraging signs of economic recovery, crediting tax relief and interest rate cuts.

➤ Scare Tactics Won't Work

- ✓ Unfortunately, some Democrats are trying to scare the American people about the budget. They opposed tax relief, and now want to raise taxes so they can spend more. Last year alone, Congress overspent its own budget to the tune of $34.5 billion.
- ✓ Raising taxes is the wrong thing to do in this economic environment. The right things for a weak economy are tax relief and restrained spending. The President took the first and best step to help the economy with tax relief that leading economists say is already providing relief for the ailing economy.
- ✓ Congressional Democrats now say the tax cut harms Social Security. Yet in March – just five months ago -- the Senate Majority Leader proposed a tax cut that would have had an even bigger impact on 2002 revenues than the President's final package.

➤ Accounting for Accuracy

Looking Back

- This Administration is reporting Social Security surpluses accurately. Accounting methods that report revenues for the budget year in which they actually were collected is responsible. American companies are required to accurately report revenues to their shareholders, and the federal government should report accurate figures for taxpayers, too.
- ✓ The accounting change is an accurate reflection of Social Security receipts in 1998, 1999, and 2000.
- ✓ This change will properly credit $5.6 billion to the Social Security Trust Fund. The former accounting practice used up to this point short-changed the Social Security Trust Fund of deserved interest. The change the Administration is making will correct this in the future.

Looking Ahead

- The economic growth projections used by the Administration are conservative and in line with respected Wall Street economists.
- ✓ For example, the Administration projects 3.2 percent economic growth in 2002 – and The Conference Board -- the group that won the Blue Chip Award last year for most accurate forecasting – mirrors that projection exactly with a 3.2 percent growth prediction. Another respected forecaster -- Merrill Lynch -- predicts 3.5 percent growth in 2002, and core Blue Chip panelist projections range from 2 to 3.7 percent growth.
- Future surpluses depend on future economic growth. The biggest threat to the economy, the surplus, paying down debt, and important programs like Social Security and Medicare is reckless spending.

Subject: Teamsters and ANWR

The Teamsters are willing to do recorded Hoffa messages urging Teamsters to call their targeted Senators in support of ANWR. They are also willing to do Hoffa/Bush calls (with POTUS on the message as well). I kind of like this, and think it makes a good story. What are your thoughts?

I believe this was raised previously in our office, but Phil Perry just called me (since I have DOI issues, technically) to say that the water management issue in Oregon is heating up again.

Apparently, DOI plans next week to turn off the water at a headgate in Oregon, pursuant to the Endangered Species Act and an effort to save the "sucker fish" and downstream wildlife. Local farmers adamantly oppose this action because it adversely affects their irrigation. DOI's plan coincides with a Farm Aid type of event to be held next week in Oregon, where many of the people who oppose DOI's action, including militia and other anti-federal government organizations, are likely to gather, and demonstrations by these people are likely.

The FBI and the local sheriff called Perry to advise of the great potential, in their view, for violence at the site of the headgate (together with significant media coverage) if the water is turned off next week. DOI, in turn, tells Perry that they have no choice but to do so, but Perry and his DOJ lawyers believe there is discretion under the statute at least to defer the action. Phil has reason to think that Secretary Norton approves of its current position.

DOJ thus felt that the White House should be made aware of this issue so that we can take any necessary action. My view is that, regardless of the ultimate necessity/legality of turning off the water, the administration would be well advised to defer such action until after the farmers' rally is concluded. With your approval, I suggest that a call be placed by WHCO (either by me or by one of you) to DOI to gather their views on this

I've handled this issue previously, and this is a recurring pattern. I, too, favor a solution that finesses the immediate difficulty. We have to make sure that DOI does in fact have legal discretion, but if it's there, it should be used. I'm happy to handle this next week if you wish. One option may be to slow the ongoing release so that the same amount of water is released over two weeks that would currently be released over one.

circumstances?

We've all seen more than enough instances in which even self-inflicted human error is converted into a multimillion-dollar liability via the courts. Think McDonald's hot coffee. Or a Coke machine falling over on vandals trying to steal money from it. The lure of "big money," once only a cheesy game show phrase, has now achieved esquire status. If you're human, basically, you're potentially guilty--and liable. And you don't have to just worry about Big Brother watching. The sue-happy predator could be as close as the person riding next to you in your car.

Business As Usual

The New Republic

"Justice delayed is justice denied," Attorney General John Ashcroft told the American Bar Association's annual convention this week. The motivation for this pronouncement was Ashcroft's pique that the Senate "has moved slowly" in its consideration of President Bush's judicial nominees, resulting in a spate of vacancies that constitute "judicial emergencies." There are a few problems with Ashcroft's complaint. First, it's not true that the Senate has moved slowly: In less than eight months, it has approved about as many federal appeals court judges as it did in both Poppy's and Bill Clinton's entire first year in office, according to the Senate Judiciary Committee. But the greater problem with Ashcroft's indignation is its staggering hypocrisy: for almost no one in America bears greater responsibility for the current "judicial emergencies" than he does. When President Clinton nominated Ronnie White to become a district court judge in 1997, then-Senator Ashcroft blocked his nomination for two years before leading the campaign to kill it on the Senate floor. A year earlier, he placed a "hold" on Margaret Morrow's nomination to a California federal district court and opposed the confirmations of Merrick B. Garland, Frederica Massiah-Jackson, and Clarence Sundram. (Massiah-Jackson and Sundram, like White, never made it to the bench.) As one Ashcroft aide bragged to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch in 1997, "We're making business as usual impossible." Before Ashcroft chastises the Senate, he might want to consider his own record. Responsibility delayed is responsibility denied.

Clashes Expected Over Bush Nominees

By Jesse Holland

Associated Press

Friday, August 17, 2001

All of President Bush's 164 unconfirmed nominees for executive and judicial positions must return to "Go" when the Senate reconvenes in September because of a political tiff over two of them.

Rather than let the Senate tell Bush to submit new candidates to head the Consumer Product Safety Commission and the State Department's Western Hemisphere affairs bureau, Republicans forced Democrats to send back all nominations awaiting approval.

The move was strictly procedural and senators in both parties expect Bush to renominate all of his candidates. However, it foreshadows more confirmation battles when Congress reconvenes after Labor Day. Republicans made it clear they will try to portray Democrats as obstructionists if they don't allow votes by the full Senate on some of Bush's more controversial choices.

"To isolate it down to one or two this early in the session, we believe, is a problem," said Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott. "We realize it is a ministerial process now. They will all be sent down and all will be bundled up and sent back, but it does highlight our concern about the way these two nominees are being treated."

The events unfolded when the Senate Commerce Committee rejected Mary Sheila Gall's nomination to head the consumer agency on a 12-11, party-line vote. Looking to peel off a Democrat or two in the full Senate, Republicans demanded she get a vote there, despite the committee's action. Not likely, responded Tom Daschle, D-S.D., who as majority leader controls the Senate agenda

Then just before recessing, Senate Democratic Whip Harry Reid of Nevada told GOP leaders his party wanted to return to the White House the nominations of Gall and Otto Reich for the State Department's top position for Western Hemisphere affairs.

Senior Democrats say Reich, who has yet to get a hearing, is too divisive for his position. His supporters claim he is being targeted for his strident antipathy toward Cuban leader Fidel Castro. From 1983 to 1986, Reich headed a State Department office that was accused of running a prohibited covert propaganda campaign against Nicaragua's then communist-backed government.

Lott rejected Reid's ploy, saying Democrats would have to return all of Bush's nominations.

Beyond the contentious confirmation of Attorney General John Ashcroft and the rejection of Gall, Bush's choices for administration jobs have won Senate approval with little or no controversy.

Senators have confirmed 227 of Bush's nonjudicial appointees with only 57 nominations not acted upon, according to the Brookings Institution's Presidential Appointee Initiative, a nonpartisan research organization.

During similar time spans, the Senate confirmed 270 of President Reagan's 304 nominees in 1981, and 199 of President Clinton's 228 nominees in 1993, Brookings data shows.

Only four of Bush's judicial nominees have won confirmation - two to fill Appeals Court vacancies and two district judges. And several judicial nominees have drawn fire from several Democratic-dominated constituency groups because of their conservative credentials.

While the Senate's Foreign Relations committee weighs Reich's nomination, its Judiciary committee will tackle Bush's choices of Jeff Sutton, Michael McConnell and Miguel Estrada for Appeals Court vacancies.

"The ones they've done so far have been non-controversial," said Sheldon Goldman, a University of Massachusetts professor and author of the book, "Picking Federal Judges: Lower Court Selection From Roosevelt Through Reagan."

"Now we'll have to see what they do with Estrada, Sutton, with the whole slew of them like McConnell," Goldman said.

Disability groups have organized against Sutton, who argued and won a case in which the Supreme Court ruled that state government employees cannot sue for discrimination under the Americans With Disabilities Act.

Groups like Americans United for Separation of Church and State oppose McConnell, who is recognized as a critic of abortion rights and church-state separation. Estrada is a partner in the Washington firm that represented Bush before the Supreme Court during his Florida recount fight with Al Gore.

Op/Eds

Segregation Of Power; Gloves Are Off In Judicial Nomination War

The Columbus Dispatch
Sunday, August 19, 2001

The recent bald declaration by Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., that President Bush's nominees for federal judiciary posts would be subjected to outright ideological screening by the Democrat-controlled Senate ripped away the last shred of pretense about what has been going on for 20 years: Both parties use the confirmation process to block each other's nominees in the hope of creating a judiciary that reflects their concept of the proper role of the courts.

This fight has gotten more vicious and shrill for several reasons.

In the past 50 years, the power of state and federal courts has grown immensely, seriously altering the relative power of each of the three branches of government.

While the Founders intended that policy-making would be vested in the Congress and state legislatures elected by the people, courts increasingly have horned in on the legislative function, issuing rulings that make policy, rather than simply interpreting or judging the constitutionality of laws passed by legislatures. The U.S. Supreme Court's 1973 finding that there is a constitutional privacy right to abortion, for example, instantly overturned the legislatively enacted abortion bans then in place in most of the states. Federal courts also have taken over urban school districts in the name of ending segregation.

Neil Lewis

This change in the relationship of courts and legislatures has come about because there have been in the United States, for at least the past half century, two very different conceptions of government's role. The traditional viewpoint, based on the Founders' recognition of government's tendency to despotism, sees a system of checks and balances designed to limit the power of government.

Besides dividing power between different branches and levels of government, the Founders also vested policymaking power in a two- chamber legislature, in order to make the process slow and deliberate.

As a result, changes in the exercise of government power would be evolutionary rather than revolutionary, an impediment to demagogues and a buffer against the surges of sometimes irrational or liberty-threatening public opinion. The sheer ponderosity of the governing machinery would make it difficult for government to crush freedom quickly or easily.

But political activists chafe at the slow grinding of the democratic machinery, whose inertia not only protects liberty but also can be exploited to preserve and prolong unfair privilege and injustice.

The Founders' sound idea that states should retain rights and powers as a counterbalance to the federal government was dragged into disrepute when Southern states used this autonomy to first defend slavery and then government-sanctioned racial discrimination in the Jim Crow era.

Well-intentioned people determined to overcome such legislatively sanctioned impediments to racial equality sought a remedy in the expansion of federal power, including that of federal courts, to overcome state resistance.

Thus, in the name of a good cause, courts became a way to make an end run around the slow-moving or recalcitrant legislatures.

Today, many political activists prefer court briefs to ballots when seeking political change. They know that a ruling by one or a handful of unelected, unaccountable federal judges can can overrule or bypass Congress, 50 state legislatures and the nation's voters.

York Times

Neil Lewis New York Times

June 26, 2001

Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis

In a trice, the Founders' carefully crafted checks against concentration of power in a few hands are rendered null and void.

While this may seem acceptable when that power clearly is used for a good cause, such as freeing citizens from racial discrimination, it is far less acceptable when the issues are less clear-cut and the electorate is deeply divided, for example, with issues such as abortion, capital punishment and education. It is precisely these most troubling issues that should be ground slowly through the democratic process rather than being "settled" by judicial fiat.

The struggle for the soul of the federal courts pits those who believe democratic processes cannot be trusted to do the "right" thing against those who believe that allowing unelected, unaccountable judges to make public policy is an invitation to despotism and a subversion of democracy.

The place where these mutually exclusive views collide is the U.S. Senate. In the past, when there was less division over the role of the courts, it was Senate practice to confirm a president's judicial nominees without much fuss, providing the candidates were qualified and competent.

But Schumer's declaration of ideological warfare shows that that era is over. The problem is, his declaration also could be a recipe for disaster. If each party refuses to confirm the other's judicial nominees, the result could be paralysis of the federal courts, with devastating effects on millions of people affected by the decisions made -- or delayed -- in those courts.

At present, about 100 federal judgeships are unfilled; that's about one in eight. If the Senate cannot agree on the candidates needed to fill them, the shortage will grow worse.

The Dispatch long has argued that presidents are entitled to nominate people who share their governing philosophy, provided the nominees meet necessary standards of character and competence. The underlying assumption is that the voters who elected the president did so with the understanding and expectation that he would nominate like-minded people to federal posts.

Agreement on such an approach may be the only way a Senate divided so deeply by judicial philosophy can ever hope to keep the federal bench fully staffed so that the wheels of justice

Misleading Impression

By Sheldon Goldman
The Courier-Journal

In the otherwise excellent and balanced news story appearing on Aug. 12 about the federal judicial nomination of David Bunning, I am quoted in a way that gives a misleading impression. As I told your reporter, I have no personal knowledge of David Bunning or his qualifications for office. I was merely responding in only a very general way to the questions posed to me. Bunning may well be among the most qualified persons available for the judgeship. My comments published in your story should not be taken to mean that I believe him either qualified or not qualified for office.

Government By Court Order

Sue has become Lady Liberty's first name. It's the new American Way for governing. Forget the old saying, "It takes an act of Congress." The adage for the new millennium is "It takes a Supreme Court ruling."

If America seems to be more polar today on many social issues, it's because our law is often being made not by our elected representatives, but by unelected court justices. The former builds consensus, the latter resentment.

Back in the fall presidential election, Democratic candidate Al Gore warned women and pro-abortion supporters that a vote for Republican candidate George W. Bush was a vote to overturn Roe vs. Wade. As powerful as the leader of the world's sole superpower may be, however, not even he can single-handedly accomplish that feat. (It's noteworthy that Gore didn't propose actually putting the abortion question to a true popular vote.)

The implication, rather, was that the election of Bush was also the election, by privilege of political appointment, of conservative and presumably anti-abortion Supreme Court justices. It was thus tacitly acknowledged, with remarkably little protest, that the judiciary was more connected with abortion lawmaking than the legislative branch.

This problem--government by court order rather than by consent of the governed--is getting worse, not better. Currently, the U.S. Senate has confirmed only three of President Bush's 44 nominations for federal court judgeships, and some senators are openly promising an ideological fight for bench seats. New York's Charles Schumer said Democrats will deny nominees of "a particular ideological cast" so as not to "reorient the direction of the federal judiciary."

So now it appears that the job of senators is not to make the laws, but to make sure we get the right sort of judges to make the laws. Schumer and his colleagues understand all too well that it's a lot easier to get re-elected if the courts tackle all the really divisive issues.

The direction he refers to is increasingly activist, and nothing thwarts democracy like judicial activism. Even if the entire population of a town unanimously supported putting a Nativity scene on its courthouse lawn, the Supreme Court would order otherwise--not to protect any local citizens in the minority opinion, but to avoid the figurative "oppression" of any minority anywhere.

Activists call that liberty. A better name is tyranny. Rather than require petitioners whose cause is beyond the scope of the explicit constitutional language to utilize the amendment process, activist justices have literally taken the law into their own hands. Not since the grand age of monarchs have the opinions of so few outweighed the wishes of so many. Overwhelming majorities of Americans (1) support the death penalty, (2) oppose unregulated abortion on demand and (3) support public school prayer, and yet the Supreme Court has ruled contrary to public sentiment on each point. Worse yet, it's done so by playing "Twister" with legal precedents and history. That's what frustrates fair-minded folks so much.

Capital punishment is mentioned in the Constitution, and yet the court once ruled it unconstitutional. (Even today its constitutionality is micromanaged by the court.) Abortion, conversely, cannot be found in the document, but like the emperor's clothes, so many serious and important people pretend it's there that the simplistic lay-person is shouted down for even querying. And wherever the line separating church and state may fall today, there's no denying that at the time the Bill of Rights was drafted, nobody, including the authors, saw prayer in public school as a breach.

It's little wonder that there is a contentious attitude today toward lawyers and lawsuits. The nation's judiciary, originally intended to be the final arbiter when all else failed, has become the venue of first resort. Why undertake lobbying hundreds of legislators to pass a new law when convincing a handful of justices will get the existing law struck down? If the will of the people is wilted by the decree of the court, well, then, the people are wrong. Special-interest activists may have started us on the slippery slope to government by court order, but sly American spectators catch on quickly. One can ably argue that trial lawyers are in fact a special-interest group, but it's no longer just the lawyers who keep sharp eyes open for jackpot tort opportunities.

USA Today ran a story this week describing Wal-Mart's volume of lawsuits: The retailer was sued a staggering 4,851 times last year, about once every two hours.

Slip and fall in your house and you're just clumsy; do it in a Wal-Mart store and you're a victim of "neglect," which in the modern legal vernacular means you get to spin the judicial wheel of fortune.

There was also a small article in the Jonesboro Sun about a $ 2 million judgment against a student and a small college after the student, who was driving the plaintiff to a concert, had an automobile accident in which the plaintiff was seriously injured. Certainly, neither the college nor the driver had any intention of causing a car wreck. Fate is fickle. The plaintiff could easily have been driving and, being human, had the accident. Would he want to be sued under reverse circumstances?

We've all seen more than enough instances in which even self-inflicted human error is converted into a multimillion-dollar liability via the courts. Think McDonald's hot coffee. Or a Coke machine falling over on vandals trying to steal money from it. The lure of "big money," once only a cheesy game show phrase, has now achieved esquire status. If you're human, basically, you're potentially guilty--and liable. And you don't have to just worry about Big Brother watching. The sue-happy predator could be as close as the person riding next to you in your car.

Business As Usual

"Justice delayed is justice denied," Attorney General John Ashcroft told the American Bar Association's annual convention this week. The motivation for this pronouncement was Ashcroft's pique that the Senate "has moved slowly" in its consideration of President Bush's judicial nominees, resulting in a spate of vacancies that constitute "judicial emergencies." There are a few problems with Ashcroft's complaint. First, it's not true that the Senate has moved slowly: In less than eight months, it has approved about as many federal appeals court judges as it did in both Poppy's and Bill Clinton's entire first year in office, according to the Senate Judiciary Committee. But the greater problem with Ashcroft's indignation is its staggering hypocrisy: for almost no one in America bears greater responsibility for the current "judicial emergencies" than he does. When President Clinton nominated Ronnie White to become a district court judge in 1997, then-Senator Ashcroft blocked his nomination for two years before leading the campaign to kill it on the Senate floor. A year earlier, he placed a "hold" on Margaret Morrow's nomination to a California federal district court and opposed the confirmations of Merrick B. Garland, Frederica Massiah-Jackson, and Clarence Sundram. (Massiah-Jackson and Sundram, like White, never made it to the bench.) As one Ashcroft aide bragged to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch in 1997, "We're making business as usual impossible." Before Ashcroft chastises the Senate, he might want to consider his own record. Responsibility delayed is responsibility denied.

Clashes Expected Over Bush Nominees

By Jesse Holland

Associated Press

Friday, August 17, 2001

All of President Bush's 164 unconfirmed nominees for executive and judicial positions must return to "Go" when the Senate reconvenes in September because of a political tiff over two of them.

Rather than let the Senate tell Bush to submit new candidates to head the Consumer Product Safety Commission and the State Department's Western Hemisphere affairs bureau, Republicans forced Democrats to send back all nominations awaiting approval.

The move was strictly procedural and senators in both parties expect Bush to renominate all of his candidates. However, it foreshadows more confirmation battles when Congress reconvenes after Labor Day. Republicans made it clear they will try to portray Democrats as obstructionists if they don't allow votes by the full Senate on some of Bush's more controversial choices.

"To isolate it down to one or two this early in the session, we believe, is a problem," said Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott. "We realize it is a ministerial process now. They will all be sent down and all will be bundled up and sent back, but it does highlight our concern about the way these two nominees are being treated."

The events unfolded when the Senate Commerce Committee rejected Mary Sheila Gall's nomination to head the consumer agency on a 12-11, party-line vote. Looking to peel off a Democrat or two in the full Senate, Republicans demanded she get a vote there, despite the committee's action. Not likely, responded Tom Daschle, D-S.D., who as majority leader controls the Senate agenda

Then just before recessing, Senate Democratic Whip Harry Reid of Nevada told GOP leaders his party wanted to return to the White House the nominations of Gall and Otto Reich for the State Department's top position for Western Hemisphere affairs.

Senior Democrats say Reich, who has yet to get a hearing, is too divisive for his position. His supporters claim he is being targeted for his strident antipathy toward Cuban leader Fidel Castro. From 1983 to 1986, Reich headed a State Department office that was accused of running a prohibited covert propaganda campaign against Nicaragua's then communist-backed government.

Lott rejected Reid's ploy, saying Democrats would have to return all of Bush's nominations.

Beyond the contentious confirmation of Attorney General John Ashcroft and the rejection of Gall, Bush's choices for administration jobs have won Senate approval with little or no controversy.

Senators have confirmed 227 of Bush's nonjudicial appointees with only 57 nominations not acted upon, according to the Brookings Institution's Presidential Appointee Initiative, a nonpartisan research organization.

During similar time spans, the Senate confirmed 270 of President Reagan's 304 nominees in 1981, and 199 of President Clinton's 228 nominees in 1993, Brookings data shows.

Only four of Bush's judicial nominees have won confirmation - two to fill Appeals Court vacancies and two district judges. And several judicial nominees have drawn fire from several Democratic-dominated constituency groups because of their conservative credentials.

While the Senate's Foreign Relations committee weighs Reich's nomination, its Judiciary committee will tackle Bush's choices of Jeff Sutton, Michael McConnell and Miguel Estrada for Appeals Court vacancies.

"The ones they've done so far have been non-controversial," said Sheldon Goldman, a University of Massachusetts professor and author of the book, "Picking Federal Judges: Lower Court Selection From Roosevelt Through Reagan."

"Now we'll have to see what they do with Estrada, Sutton, with the whole slew of them like McConnell," Goldman said.

Disability groups have organized against Sutton, who argued and won a case in which the Supreme Court ruled that state government employees cannot sue for discrimination under the Americans With Disabilities Act.

Groups like Americans United for Separation of Church and State oppose McConnell, who is recognized as a critic of abortion rights and church-state separation. Estrada is a partner in the Washington firm that represented Bush before the Supreme Court during his Florida recount fight with Al Gore.

Op/Eds

Segregation Of Power; Gloves Are Off In Judicial Nomination War

The Columbus Dispatch
Sunday, August 19, 2001

The recent bald declaration by Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., that President Bush's nominees for federal judiciary posts would be subjected to outright ideological screening by the Democrat-controlled Senate ripped away the last shred of pretense about what has been going on for 20 years: Both parties use the confirmation process to block each other's nominees in the hope of creating a judiciary that reflects their concept of the proper role of the courts.

This fight has gotten more vicious and shrill for several reasons.

In the past 50 years, the power of state and federal courts has grown immensely, seriously altering the relative power of each of the three branches of government.

While the Founders intended that policy-making would be vested in the Congress and state legislatures elected by the people, courts increasingly have horned in on the legislative function, issuing rulings that make policy, rather than simply interpreting or judging the constitutionality of laws passed by legislatures. The U.S. Supreme Court's 1973 finding that there is a constitutional privacy right to abortion, for example, instantly overturned the legislatively enacted abortion bans then in place in most of the states. Federal courts also have taken over urban school districts in the name of ending segregation.

York Times

Neil Lewis New York Times
June 26, 2001

Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate
Neil Lewis

This change in the relationship of courts and legislatures has come about because there have been in the United States, for at least the past half century, two very different conceptions of government's role. The traditional viewpoint, based on the Founders' recognition of government's tendency to despotism, sees a system of checks and balances designed to limit the power of government.

Besides dividing power between different branches and levels of government, the Founders also vested policymaking power in a two- chamber legislature, in order to make the process slow and deliberate.

As a result, changes in the exercise of government power would be evolutionary rather than revolutionary, an impediment to demagogues and a buffer against the surges of sometimes irrational or liberty-threatening public opinion. The sheer ponderosity of the governing machinery would make it difficult for government to crush freedom quickly or easily.

But political activists chafe at the slow grinding of the democratic machinery, whose inertia not only protects liberty but also can be exploited to preserve and prolong unfair privilege and injustice.

The Founders' sound idea that states should retain rights and powers as a counterbalance to the federal government was dragged into disrepute when Southern states used this autonomy to first defend slavery and then government-sanctioned racial discrimination in the Jim Crow era.

Well-intentioned people determined to overcome such legislatively sanctioned impediments to racial equality sought a remedy in the expansion of federal power, including that of federal courts, to overcome state resistance.

Thus, in the name of a good cause, courts became a way to make an end run around the slow-moving or recalcitrant legislatures.

Today, many political activists prefer court briefs to ballots when seeking political change. They know that a ruling by one or a handful of unelected, unaccountable federal judges can can overrule or bypass Congress, 50 state legislatures and the nation's voters.

York Times

June 26, 2001 Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis New York Times

June 26, 2001

Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis

In a trice, the Founders' carefully crafted checks against concentration of power in a few hands are rendered null and void.

While this may seem acceptable when that power clearly is used for a good cause, such as freeing citizens from racial discrimination, it is far less acceptable when the issues are less clear-cut and the electorate is deeply divided, for example, with issues such as abortion, capital punishment and education. It is precisely these most troubling issues that should be ground slowly through the democratic process rather than being "settled" by judicial fiat.

The struggle for the soul of the federal courts pits those who believe democratic processes cannot be trusted to do the "right" thing against those who believe that allowing unelected, unaccountable judges to make public policy is an invitation to despotism and a subversion of democracy.

The place where these mutually exclusive views collide is the U.S. Senate. In the past, when there was less division over the role of the courts, it was Senate practice to confirm a president's judicial nominees without much fuss, providing the candidates were qualified and competent.

But Schumer's declaration of ideological warfare shows that that era is over. The problem is, his declaration also could be a recipe for disaster. If each party refuses to confirm the other's judicial nominees, the result could be paralysis of the federal courts, with devastating effects on millions of people affected by the decisions made -- or delayed -- in those courts.

At present, about 100 federal judgeships are unfilled; that's about one in eight. If the Senate cannot agree on the candidates needed to fill them, the shortage will grow worse.

The Dispatch long has argued that presidents are entitled to nominate people who share their governing philosophy, provided the nominees meet necessary standards of character and competence. The underlying assumption is that the voters who elected the president did so with the understanding and expectation that he would nominate like-minded people to federal posts.

Agreement on such an approach may be the only way a Senate divided so deeply by judicial philosophy can ever hope to keep the federal bench fully staffed so that the wheels of justice circumstances?

We've all seen more than enough instances in which even self-inflicted human error is converted into a multimillion-dollar liability via the courts. Think McDonald's hot coffee. Or a Coke machine falling over on vandals trying to steal money from it. The lure of "big money," once only a cheesy game show phrase, has now achieved esquire status. If you're human, basically, you're potentially guilty--and liable. And you don't have to just worry about Big Brother watching. The sue-happy predator could be as close as the person riding next to you in your car.

Business As Usual

The New Republic

Monday, August 20, 2001

"Justice delayed is justice denied," Attorney General John Ashcroft told the American Bar Association's annual convention this week. The motivation for this pronouncement was Ashcroft's pique that the Senate "has moved slowly" in its consideration of President Bush's judicial nominees, resulting in a spate of vacancies that constitute "judicial emergencies." There are a few problems with Ashcroft's complaint. First, it's not true that the Senate has moved slowly: In less than eight months, it has approved about as many federal appeals court judges as it did in both Poppy's and Bill Clinton's entire first year in office, according to the Senate Judiciary Committee. But the greater problem with Ashcroft's indignation is its staggering hypocrisy: for almost no one in America bears greater responsibility for the current "judicial emergencies" than he does. When President Clinton nominated Ronnie White to become a district court judge in 1997, then-Senator Ashcroft blocked his nomination for two years before leading the campaign to kill it on the Senate floor. A year earlier, he placed a "hold" on Margaret Morrow's nomination to a California federal district court and opposed the confirmations of Merrick B. Garland, Frederica Massiah-Jackson, and Clarence Sundram. (Massiah-Jackson and Sundram, like White, never made it to the bench.) As one Ashcroft aide bragged to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch in 1997, "We're making business as usual impossible." Before Ashcroft chastises the Senate, he might want to consider his own record. Responsibility delayed is responsibility denied.

Clashes Expected Over Bush Nominees

By Jesse Holland

Associated Press

Friday, August 17, 2001

All of President Bush's 164 unconfirmed nominees for executive and judicial positions must return to "Go" when the Senate reconvenes in September because of a political tiff over two of them.

Rather than let the Senate tell Bush to submit new candidates to head the Consumer Product Safety Commission and the State Department's Western Hemisphere affairs bureau, Republicans forced Democrats to send back all nominations awaiting approval.

The move was strictly procedural and senators in both parties expect Bush to renominate all of his candidates. However, it foreshadows more confirmation battles when Congress reconvenes after Labor Day. Republicans made it clear they will try to portray Democrats as obstructionists if they don't allow votes by the full Senate on some of Bush's more controversial choices.

"To isolate it down to one or two this early in the session, we believe, is a problem," said Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott. "We realize it is a ministerial process now. They will all be sent down and all will be bundled up and sent back, but it does highlight our concern about the way these two nominees are being treated."

The events unfolded when the Senate Commerce Committee rejected Mary Sheila Gall's nomination to head the consumer agency on a 12-11, party-line vote. Looking to peel off a Democrat or two in the full Senate, Republicans demanded she get a vote there, despite the committee's action. Not likely, responded Tom Daschle, D-S.D., who as majority leader controls the Senate agenda

Then just before recessing, Senate Democratic Whip Harry Reid of Nevada told GOP leaders his party wanted to return to the White House the nominations of Gall and Otto Reich for the State Department's top position for Western Hemisphere affairs.

Senior Democrats say Reich, who has yet to get a hearing, is too divisive for his position. His supporters claim he is being targeted for his strident antipathy toward Cuban leader Fidel Castro. From 1983 to 1986, Reich headed a State Department office that was accused of running a prohibited covert propaganda campaign against Nicaragua's then communist-backed government.

Lott rejected Reid's ploy, saying Democrats would have to return all of Bush's nominations.

Beyond the contentious confirmation of Attorney General John Ashcroft and the rejection of Gall, Bush's choices for administration jobs have won Senate approval with little or no controversy.

Senators have confirmed 227 of Bush's nonjudicial appointees with only 57 nominations not acted upon, according to the Brookings Institution's Presidential Appointee Initiative, a nonpartisan research organization.

During similar time spans, the Senate confirmed 270 of President Reagan's 304 nominees in 1981, and 199 of President Clinton's 228 nominees in 1993, Brookings data shows.

Only four of Bush's judicial nominees have won confirmation - two to fill Appeals Court vacancies and two district judges. And several judicial nominees have drawn fire from several Democratic-dominated constituency groups because of their conservative credentials.

While the Senate's Foreign Relations committee weighs Reich's nomination, its Judiciary committee will tackle Bush's choices of Jeff Sutton, Michael McConnell and Miguel Estrada for Appeals Court vacancies.

"The ones they've done so far have been non-controversial," said Sheldon Goldman, a University of Massachusetts professor and author of the book, "Picking Federal Judges: Lower Court Selection From Roosevelt Through Reagan."

"Now we'll have to see what they do with Estrada, Sutton, with the whole slew of them like McConnell," Goldman said.

Disability groups have organized against Sutton, who argued and won a case in which the Supreme Court ruled that state government employees cannot sue for discrimination under the Americans With Disabilities Act.

Groups like Americans United for Separation of Church and State oppose McConnell, who is recognized as a critic of abortion rights and church-state separation. Estrada is a partner in the Washington firm that represented Bush before the Supreme Court during his Florida recount fight with Al Gore.

Op/Eds

Segregation Of Power; Gloves Are Off In Judicial Nomination War

The Columbus Dispatch
Sunday, August 19, 2001

The recent bald declaration by Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., that President Bush's nominees for federal judiciary posts would be subjected to outright ideological screening by the Democrat-controlled Senate ripped away the last shred of pretense about what has been going on for 20 years: Both parties use the confirmation process to block each other's nominees in the hope of creating a judiciary that reflects their concept of the proper role of the courts.

This fight has gotten more vicious and shrill for several reasons.

In the past 50 years, the power of state and federal courts has grown immensely, seriously altering the relative power of each of the three branches of government.

While the Founders intended that policy-making would be vested in the Congress and state legislatures elected by the people, courts increasingly have horned in on the legislative function, issuing rulings that make policy, rather than simply interpreting or judging the constitutionality of laws passed by legislatures. The U.S. Supreme Court's 1973 finding that there is a constitutional privacy right to abortion, for example, instantly overturned the legislatively enacted abortion bans then in place in most of the states. Federal courts also have taken over urban school districts in the name of ending segregation.

York Times

Neil Lewis New York Times
June 26, 2001

Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate
Neil Lewis

This change in the relationship of courts and legislatures has come about because there have been in the United States, for at least the past half century, two very different conceptions of government's role. The traditional viewpoint, based on the Founders' recognition of government's tendency to despotism, sees a system of checks and balances designed to limit the power of government.

Besides dividing power between different branches and levels of government, the Founders also vested policymaking power in a two- chamber legislature, in order to make the process slow and deliberate.

As a result, changes in the exercise of government power would be evolutionary rather than revolutionary, an impediment to demagogues and a buffer against the surges of sometimes irrational or liberty-threatening public opinion. The sheer ponderosity of the governing machinery would make it difficult for government to crush freedom quickly or easily.

But political activists chafe at the slow grinding of the democratic machinery, whose inertia not only protects liberty but also can be exploited to preserve and prolong unfair privilege and injustice.

The Founders' sound idea that states should retain rights and powers as a counterbalance to the federal government was dragged into disrepute when Southern states used this autonomy to first defend slavery and then government-sanctioned racial discrimination in the Jim Crow era.

Well-intentioned people determined to overcome such legislatively sanctioned impediments to racial equality sought a remedy in the expansion of federal power, including that of federal courts, to overcome state resistance.

Thus, in the name of a good cause, courts became a way to make an end run around the slow-moving or recalcitrant legislatures.

Today, many political activists prefer court briefs to ballots when seeking political change. They know that a ruling by one or a handful of unelected, unaccountable federal judges can can overrule or bypass Congress, 50 state legislatures and the nation's voters.

York Times

June 26, 2001 oad to Federal ts Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis New York Times

June 26, 2001

Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis

In a trice, the Founders' carefully crafted checks against concentration of power in a few hands are rendered null and void.

While this may seem acceptable when that power clearly is used for a good cause, such as freeing citizens from racial discrimination, it is far less acceptable when the issues are less clear-cut and the electorate is deeply divided, for example, with issues such as abortion, capital punishment and education. It is precisely these most troubling issues that should be ground slowly through the democratic process rather than being "settled" by judicial fiat.

The struggle for the soul of the federal courts pits those who believe democratic processes cannot be trusted to do the "right" thing against those who believe that allowing unelected, unaccountable judges to make public policy is an invitation to despotism and a subversion of democracy.

The place where these mutually exclusive views collide is the U.S. Senate. In the past, when there was less division over the role of the courts, it was Senate practice to confirm a president's judicial nominees without much fuss, providing the candidates were qualified and competent.

But Schumer's declaration of ideological warfare shows that that era is over. The problem is, his declaration also could be a recipe for disaster. If each party refuses to confirm the other's judicial nominees, the result could be paralysis of the federal courts, with devastating effects on millions of people affected by the decisions made -- or delayed -- in those courts.

At present, about 100 federal judgeships are unfilled; that's about one in eight. If the Senate cannot agree on the candidates needed to fill them, the shortage will grow worse.

The Dispatch long has argued that presidents are entitled to nominate people who share their governing philosophy, provided the nominees meet necessary standards of character and competence. The underlying assumption is that the voters who elected the president did so with the understanding and expectation that he would nominate like-minded people to federal posts.

Agreement on such an approach may be the only way a Senate divided so deeply by judicial philosophy can ever hope to keep the federal bench fully staffed so that the wheels of justice keep turning.

If each party refuses to confirm the other's judicial nominees, the result could be paralysis of the federal courts, with devastating effects on millions of people.

Misleading Impression

By Sheldon Goldman
The Courier-Journal
Friday, August 17, 2001

In the otherwise excellent and balanced news story appearing on Aug. 12 about the federal judicial nomination of David Bunning, I am quoted in a way that gives a misleading impression. As I told your reporter, I have no personal knowledge of David Bunning or his qualifications for office. I was merely responding in only a very general way to the questions posed to me. Bunning may well be among the most qualified persons available for the judgeship. My comments published in your story should not be taken to mean that I believe him either qualified or not qualified for office.

Government By Court Order

By Dana D. Kelley
The Arkansas Democrat-Gazette
Friday, August 17, 2001

Sue has become Lady Liberty's first name. It's the new American Way for governing. Forget the old saying, "It takes an act of Congress." The adage for the new millennium is "It takes a Supreme Court ruling."

If America seems to be more polar today on many social issues, it's because our law is often being made not by our elected representatives, but by unelected court justices. The former builds consensus, the latter resentment.

Back in the fall presidential election, Democratic candidate Al Gore warned women and pro-abortion supporters that a vote for Republican candidate George W. Bush was a vote to overturn Roe vs. Wade. As powerful as the leader of the world's sole superpower may be, however, not even he can single-handedly accomplish that feat. (It's noteworthy that Gore didn't propose actually putting the abortion question to a true popular vote.)

The implication, rather, was that the election of Bush was also the election, by privilege of political appointment, of conservative and presumably anti-abortion Supreme Court justices. It was thus tacitly acknowledged, with remarkably little protest, that the judiciary was more connected with abortion lawmaking than the legislative branch.

This problem--government by court order rather than by consent of the governed--is getting worse, not better. Currently, the U.S. Senate has confirmed only three of President Bush's 44 nominations for federal court judgeships, and some senators are openly promising an ideological fight for bench seats. New York's Charles Schumer said Democrats will deny nominees of "a particular ideological cast" so as not to "reorient the direction of the federal judiciary."

So now it appears that the job of senators is not to make the laws, but to make sure we get the right sort of judges to make the laws. Schumer and his colleagues understand all too well that it's a lot easier to get re-elected if the courts tackle all the really divisive issues.

The direction he refers to is increasingly activist, and nothing thwarts democracy like judicial activism. Even if the entire population of a town unanimously supported putting a Nativity scene on its courthouse lawn, the Supreme Court would order otherwise--not to protect any local citizens in the minority opinion, but to avoid the figurative "oppression" of any minority anywhere.

Activists call that liberty. A better name is tyranny. Rather than require petitioners whose cause is beyond the scope of the explicit constitutional language to utilize the amendment process, activist justices have literally taken the law into their own hands. Not since the grand age of monarchs have the opinions of so few outweighed the wishes of so many. Overwhelming majorities of Americans (1) support the death penalty, (2) oppose unregulated abortion on demand and (3) support public school prayer, and yet the Supreme Court has ruled contrary to public sentiment on each point. Worse yet, it's done so by playing "Twister" with legal precedents and history. That's what frustrates fair-minded folks so much.

Capital punishment is mentioned in the Constitution, and yet the court once ruled it unconstitutional. (Even today its constitutionality is micromanaged by the court.) Abortion, conversely, cannot be found in the document, but like the emperor's clothes, so many serious and important people pretend it's there that the simplistic lay-person is shouted down for even querying. And wherever the line separating church and state may fall today, there's no denying that at the time the Bill of Rights was drafted, nobody, including the authors, saw prayer in public school as a breach.

It's little wonder that there is a contentious attitude today toward lawyers and lawsuits. The nation's judiciary, originally intended to be the final arbiter when all else failed, has become the venue of first resort. Why undertake lobbying hundreds of legislators to pass a new law when convincing a handful of justices will get the existing law struck down? If the will of the people is wilted by the decree of the court, well, then, the people are wrong. Special-interest activists may have started us on the slippery slope to government by court order, but sly American spectators catch on quickly. One can ably argue that trial lawyers are in fact a special-interest group, but it's no longer just the lawyers who keep sharp eyes open for jackpot tort opportunities.

USA Today ran a story this week describing Wal-Mart's volume of lawsuits: The retailer was sued a staggering 4,851 times last year, about once every two hours.

Slip and fall in your house and you're just clumsy; do it in a Wal-Mart store and you're a victim of "neglect," which in the modern legal vernacular means you get to spin the judicial wheel of fortune.

There was also a small article in the Jonesboro Sun about a $ 2 million judgment against a student and a small college after the student, who was driving the plaintiff to a concert, had an automobile accident in which the plaintiff was seriously injured. circumstances?

We've all seen more than enough instances in which even self-inflicted human error is converted into a multimillion-dollar liability via the courts. Think McDonald's hot coffee. Or a Coke machine falling over on vandals trying to steal money from it. The lure of "big money," once only a cheesy game show phrase, has now achieved esquire status. If you're human, basically, you're potentially guilty--and liable. And you don't have to just worry about Big Brother watching. The sue-happy predator could be as close as the person riding next to you in your car.

"Justice delayed is justice denied," Attorney General John Ashcroft told the American Bar Association's annual convention this week. The motivation for this pronouncement was Ashcroft's pique that the Senate "has moved slowly" in its consideration of President Bush's judicial nominees, resulting in a spate of vacancies that constitute "judicial emergencies." There are a few problems with Ashcroft's complaint. First, it's not true that the Senate has moved slowly: In less than eight months, it has approved about as many federal appeals court judges as it did in both Poppy's and Bill Clinton's entire first year in office, according to the Senate Judiciary Committee. But the greater problem with Ashcroft's indignation is its staggering hypocrisy: for almost no one in America bears greater responsibility for the current "judicial emergencies" than he does. When President Clinton nominated Ronnie White to become a district court judge in 1997, then-Senator Ashcroft blocked his nomination for two years before leading the campaign to kill it on the Senate floor. A year earlier, he placed a "hold" on Margaret Morrow's nomination to a California federal district court and opposed the confirmations of Merrick B. Garland, Frederica Massiah-Jackson, and Clarence Sundram. (Massiah-Jackson and Sundram, like White, never made it to the bench.) As one Ashcroft aide bragged to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch in 1997, "We're making business as usual impossible." Before Ashcroft chastises the Senate, he might want to consider his own record. Responsibility delayed is responsibility denied.

Clashes Expected Over Bush Nominees

By Jesse Holland

Associated Press

Friday, August 17, 2001

All of President Bush's 164 unconfirmed nominees for executive and judicial positions must return to "Go" when the Senate reconvenes in September because of a political tiff over two of them.

Rather than let the Senate tell Bush to submit new candidates to head the Consumer Product Safety Commission and the State Department's Western Hemisphere affairs bureau, Republicans forced Democrats to send back all nominations awaiting approval.

The move was strictly procedural and senators in both parties expect Bush to renominate all of his candidates. However, it foreshadows more confirmation battles when Congress reconvenes after Labor Day. Republicans made it clear they will try to portray Democrats as obstructionists if they don't allow votes by the full Senate on some of Bush's more controversial choices.

"To isolate it down to one or two this early in the session, we believe, is a problem," said Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott. "We realize it is a ministerial process now. They will all be sent down and all will be bundled up and sent back, but it does highlight our concern about the way these two nominees are being treated."

The events unfolded when the Senate Commerce Committee rejected Mary Sheila Gall's nomination to head the consumer agency on a 12-11, party-line vote. Looking to peel off a Democrat or two in the full Senate, Republicans demanded she get a vote there, despite the committee's action. Not likely, responded Tom Daschle, D-S.D., who as majority leader controls the Senate agenda

Then just before recessing, Senate Democratic Whip Harry Reid of Nevada told GOP leaders his party wanted to return to the White House the nominations of Gall and Otto Reich for the State Department's top position for Western Hemisphere affairs.

Senior Democrats say Reich, who has yet to get a hearing, is too divisive for his position. His supporters claim he is being targeted for his strident antipathy toward Cuban leader Fidel Castro. From 1983 to 1986, Reich headed a State Department office that was accused of running a prohibited covert propaganda campaign against Nicaragua's then communist-backed government.

Lott rejected Reid's ploy, saying Democrats would have to return all of Bush's nominations.

Beyond the contentious confirmation of Attorney General John Ashcroft and the rejection of Gall, Bush's choices for administration jobs have won Senate approval with little or no controversy.

Senators have confirmed 227 of Bush's nonjudicial appointees with only 57 nominations not acted upon, according to the Brookings Institution's Presidential Appointee Initiative, a nonpartisan research organization.

During similar time spans, the Senate confirmed 270 of President Reagan's 304 nominees in 1981, and 199 of President Clinton's 228 nominees in 1993, Brookings data shows.

Only four of Bush's judicial nominees have won confirmation - two to fill Appeals Court vacancies and two district judges. And several judicial nominees have drawn fire from several Democratic-dominated constituency groups because of their conservative credentials.

While the Senate's Foreign Relations committee weighs Reich's nomination, its Judiciary committee will tackle Bush's choices of Jeff Sutton, Michael McConnell and Miguel Estrada for Appeals Court vacancies.

"The ones they've done so far have been non-controversial," said Sheldon Goldman, a University of Massachusetts professor and author of the book, "Picking Federal Judges: Lower Court Selection From Roosevelt Through Reagan."

"Now we'll have to see what they do with Estrada, Sutton, with the whole slew of them like McConnell," Goldman said.

Disability groups have organized against Sutton, who argued and won a case in which the Supreme Court ruled that state government employees cannot sue for discrimination under the Americans With Disabilities Act.

Groups like Americans United for Separation of Church and State oppose McConnell, who is recognized as a critic of abortion rights and church-state separation. Estrada is a partner in the Washington firm that represented Bush before the Supreme Court during his Florida recount fight with Al Gore.

Op/Eds

Segregation Of Power; Gloves Are Off In Judicial Nomination War

The Columbus Dispatch
Sunday, August 19, 2001

The recent bald declaration by Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., that President Bush's nominees for federal judiciary posts would be subjected to outright ideological screening by the Democrat-controlled Senate ripped away the last shred of pretense about what has been going on for 20 years: Both parties use the confirmation process to block each other's nominees in the hope of creating a judiciary that reflects their concept of the proper role of the courts.

This fight has gotten more vicious and shrill for several reasons.

In the past 50 years, the power of state and federal courts has grown immensely, seriously altering the relative power of each of the three branches of government.

While the Founders intended that policy-making would be vested in the Congress and state legislatures elected by the people, courts increasingly have horned in on the legislative function, issuing rulings that make policy, rather than simply interpreting or judging the constitutionality of laws passed by legislatures. The U.S. Supreme Court's 1973 finding that there is a constitutional privacy right to abortion, for example, instantly overturned the legislatively enacted abortion bans then in place in most of the states. Federal courts also have taken over urban school districts in the name of ending segregation.

Neil Lewis New York Times
June 26, 2001

Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate
Neil Lewis

This change in the relationship of courts and legislatures has come about because there have been in the United States, for at least the past half century, two very different conceptions of government's role. The traditional viewpoint, based on the Founders' recognition of government's tendency to despotism, sees a system of checks and balances designed to limit the power of government.

Besides dividing power between different branches and levels of government, the Founders also vested policymaking power in a two- chamber legislature, in order to make the process slow and deliberate.

As a result, changes in the exercise of government power would be evolutionary rather than revolutionary, an impediment to demagogues and a buffer against the surges of sometimes irrational or liberty-threatening public opinion. The sheer ponderosity of the governing machinery would make it difficult for government to crush freedom quickly or easily.

But political activists chafe at the slow grinding of the democratic machinery, whose inertia not only protects liberty but also can be exploited to preserve and prolong unfair privilege and injustice.

The Founders' sound idea that states should retain rights and powers as a counterbalance to the federal government was dragged into disrepute when Southern states used this autonomy to first defend slavery and then government-sanctioned racial discrimination in the Jim Crow era.

Well-intentioned people determined to overcome such legislatively sanctioned impediments to racial equality sought a remedy in the expansion of federal power, including that of federal courts, to overcome state resistance.

Thus, in the name of a good cause, courts became a way to make an end run around the slow-moving or recalcitrant legislatures.

Today, many political activists prefer court briefs to ballots when seeking political change. They know that a ruling by one or a handful of unelected, unaccountable federal judges can can overrule or bypass Congress, 50 state legislatures and the nation's voters.

York Times

June 26, 2001 Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis New York Times

June 26, 2001

Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis

In a trice, the Founders' carefully crafted checks against concentration of power in a few hands are rendered null and void.

While this may seem acceptable when that power clearly is used for a good cause, such as freeing citizens from racial discrimination, it is far less acceptable when the issues are less clear-cut and the electorate is deeply divided, for example, with issues such as abortion, capital punishment and education. It is precisely these most troubling issues that should be ground slowly through the democratic process rather than being "settled" by judicial fiat.

The struggle for the soul of the federal courts pits those who believe democratic processes cannot be trusted to do the "right" thing against those who believe that allowing unelected, unaccountable judges to make public policy is an invitation to despotism and a subversion of democracy.

The place where these mutually exclusive views collide is the U.S. Senate. In the past, when there was less division over the role of the courts, it was Senate practice to confirm a president's judicial nominees without much fuss, providing the candidates were qualified and competent.

But Schumer's declaration of ideological warfare shows that that era is over. The problem is, his declaration also could be a recipe for disaster. If each party refuses to confirm the other's judicial nominees, the result could be paralysis of the federal courts, with devastating effects on millions of people affected by the decisions made -- or delayed -- in those courts.

At present, about 100 federal judgeships are unfilled; that's about one in eight. If the Senate cannot agree on the candidates needed to fill them, the shortage will grow worse.

The Dispatch long has argued that presidents are entitled to nominate people who share their governing philosophy, provided the nominees meet necessary standards of character and competence. The underlying assumption is that the voters who elected the president did so with the understanding and expectation that he would nominate like-minded people to federal posts.

Agreement on such an approach may be the only way a Senate divided so deeply by judicial philosophy can ever hope to keep the federal bench fully staffed so that the wheels of justice keep turning.

If each party refuses to confirm the other's judicial nominees, the result could be paralysis of the federal courts, with devastating effects on millions of people.

Misleading Impression

By Sheldon Goldman
The Courier-Journal
Friday, August 17, 2001

In the otherwise excellent and balanced news story appearing on Aug. 12 about the federal judicial nomination of David Bunning, I am quoted in a way that gives a misleading impression. As I told your reporter, I have no personal knowledge of David Bunning or his qualifications for office. I was merely responding in only a very general way to the questions posed to me. Bunning may well be among the most qualified persons available for the judgeship. My comments published in your story should not be taken to mean that I believe him either qualified or not qualified for office.

Government By Court Order

By Dana D. Kelley
The Arkansas Democrat-Gazette
Friday, August 17, 2001

Sue has become Lady Liberty's first name. It's the new American Way for governing. Forget the old saying, "It takes an act of Congress." The adage for the new millennium is "It takes a Supreme Court ruling."

If America seems to be more polar today on many social issues, it's because our law is often being made not by our elected representatives, but by unelected court justices. The former builds consensus, the latter resentment.

Back in the fall presidential election, Democratic candidate Al Gore warned women and pro-abortion supporters that a vote for Republican candidate George W. Bush was a vote to overturn Roe vs. Wade. As powerful as the leader of the world's sole superpower may be, however, not even he can single-handedly accomplish that feat. (It's noteworthy that Gore didn't propose actually putting the abortion question to a true popular vote.)

The implication, rather, was that the election of Bush was also the election, by privilege of political appointment, of conservative and presumably anti-abortion Supreme Court justices. It was thus tacitly acknowledged, with remarkably little protest, that the judiciary was more connected with abortion lawmaking than the legislative branch.

This problem--government by court order rather than by consent of the governed--is getting worse, not better. Currently, the U.S. Senate has confirmed only three of President Bush's 44 nominations for federal court judgeships, and some senators are openly promising an ideological fight for bench seats. New York's Charles Schumer said Democrats will deny nominees of "a particular ideological cast" so as not to "reorient the direction of the federal judiciary."

So now it appears that the job of senators is not to make the laws, but to make sure we get the right sort of judges to make the laws. Schumer and his colleagues understand all too well that it's a lot easier to get re-elected if the courts tackle all the really divisive issues.

The direction he refers to is increasingly activist, and nothing thwarts democracy like judicial activism. Even if the entire population of a town unanimously supported putting a Nativity scene on its courthouse lawn, the Supreme Court would order otherwise--not to protect any local citizens in the minority opinion, but to avoid the figurative "oppression" of any minority anywhere.

Activists call that liberty. A better name is tyranny. Rather than require petitioners whose cause is beyond the scope of the explicit constitutional language to utilize the amendment process, activist justices have literally taken the law into their own hands. Not since the grand age of monarchs have the opinions of so few outweighed the wishes of so many. Overwhelming majorities of Americans (1) support the death penalty, (2) oppose unregulated abortion on demand and (3) support public school prayer, and yet the Supreme Court has ruled contrary to public sentiment on each point. Worse yet, it's done so by playing "Twister" with legal precedents and history. That's what frustrates fair-minded folks so much.

Capital punishment is mentioned in the Constitution, and yet the court once ruled it unconstitutional. (Even today its constitutionality is micromanaged by the court.) Abortion, conversely, cannot be found in the document, but like the emperor's clothes, so many serious and important people pretend it's there that the simplistic lay-person is shouted down for even querying. And wherever the line separating church and state may fall today, there's no denying that at the time the Bill of Rights was drafted, nobody, including the authors, saw prayer in public school as a breach.

It's little wonder that there is a contentious attitude today toward lawyers and lawsuits. The nation's judiciary, originally intended to be the final arbiter when all else failed, has become the venue of first resort. Why undertake lobbying hundreds of legislators to pass a new law when convincing a handful of justices will get the existing law struck down? If the will of the people is wilted by the decree of the court, well, then, the people are wrong. Special-interest activists may have started us on the slippery slope to government by court order, but sly American spectators catch on quickly. One can ably argue that trial lawyers are in fact a special-interest group, but it's no longer just the lawyers who keep sharp eyes open for jackpot tort opportunities.

USA Today ran a story this week describing Wal-Mart's volume of lawsuits: The retailer was sued a staggering 4,851 times last year, about once every two hours.

Slip and fall in your house and you're just clumsy; do it in a Wal-Mart store and you're a victim of "neglect," which in the modern legal vernacular means you get to spin the judicial wheel of fortune.

There was also a small article in the Jonesboro Sun about a $ 2 million judgment against a student and a small college after the student, who was driving the plaintiff to a concert, had an automobile accident in which the plaintiff was seriously injured. Certainly, neither the college nor the driver had any intention of causing a car wreck. Fate is fickle. The plaintiff could easily have been driving and, being human, had the accident. Would he want to be sued under reverse

"Justice delayed is justice denied," Attorney General John Ashcroft told the American Bar Association's annual convention this week. The motivation for this pronouncement was Ashcroft's pique that the Senate "has moved slowly" in its consideration of President Bush's judicial nominees, resulting in a spate of vacancies that constitute "judicial emergencies." There are a few problems with Ashcroft's complaint. First, it's not true that the Senate has moved slowly: In less than eight months, it has approved about as many federal appeals court judges as it did in both Poppy's and Bill Clinton's entire first year in office, according to the Senate Judiciary Committee. But the greater problem with Ashcroft's indignation is its staggering hypocrisy: for almost no one in America bears greater responsibility for the current "judicial emergencies" than he does. Garland, Frederica Massiah-Jackson, and Clarence Sundram. (Massiah-Jackson and Sundram, like White, never made it to the bench.) As one Ashcroft aide bragged to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch in 1997, "We're making business as usual impossible." Before Ashcroft chastises the Senate, he might want to consider his own record. Responsibility delayed is responsibility denied.

Clashes Expected Over Bush Nominees

By Jesse Holland

Associated Press

Friday, August 17, 2001

All of President Bush's 164 unconfirmed nominees for executive and judicial positions must return to "Go" when the Senate reconvenes in September because of a political tiff over two of them.

Rather than let the Senate tell Bush to submit new candidates to head the Consumer Product Safety Commission and the State Department's Western Hemisphere affairs bureau, Republicans forced Democrats to send back all nominations awaiting approval.

The move was strictly procedural and senators in both parties expect Bush to renominate all of his candidates. However, it foreshadows more confirmation battles when Congress reconvenes after Labor Day. Republicans made it clear they will try to portray Democrats as obstructionists if they don't allow votes by the full Senate on some of Bush's more controversial choices.

"To isolate it down to one or two this early in the session, we believe, is a problem," said Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott. "We realize it is a ministerial process now. They will all be sent down and all will be bundled up and sent back, but it does highlight our concern about the way these two nominees are being treated."

The events unfolded when the Senate Commerce Committee rejected Mary Sheila Gall's nomination to head the consumer agency on a 12-11, party-line vote. Looking to peel off a Democrat or two in the full Senate, Republicans demanded she get a vote there, despite the committee's action. Not likely, responded Tom Daschle, D-S.D., who as majority leader controls the Senate agenda

Then just before recessing, Senate Democratic Whip Harry Reid of Nevada told GOP leaders his party wanted to return to the White House the nominations of Gall and Otto Reich for the State Department's top position for Western Hemisphere affairs.

Senior Democrats say Reich, who has yet to get a hearing, is too divisive for his position. His supporters claim he is being targeted for his strident antipathy toward Cuban leader Fidel Castro. From 1983 to 1986, Reich headed a State Department office that was accused of running a prohibited covert propaganda campaign against Nicaragua's then communist-backed government.

Lott rejected Reid's ploy, saying Democrats would have to return all of Bush's nominations.

Beyond the contentious confirmation of Attorney General John Ashcroft and the rejection of Gall, Bush's choices for administration jobs have won Senate approval with little or no controversy.

Senators have confirmed 227 of Bush's nonjudicial appointees with only 57 nominations not acted upon, according to the Brookings Institution's Presidential Appointee Initiative, a nonpartisan research organization.

During similar time spans, the Senate confirmed 270 of President Reagan's 304 nominees in 1981, and 199 of President Clinton's 228 nominees in 1993, Brookings data shows.

Only four of Bush's judicial nominees have won confirmation - two to fill Appeals Court vacancies and two district judges. And several judicial nominees have drawn fire from several Democratic-dominated constituency groups because of their conservative credentials.

While the Senate's Foreign Relations committee weighs Reich's nomination, its Judiciary committee will tackle Bush's choices of Jeff Sutton, Michael McConnell and Miguel Estrada for Appeals Court vacancies.

"The ones they've done so far have been non-controversial," said Sheldon Goldman, a University of Massachusetts professor and author of the book, "Picking Federal Judges: Lower Court Selection From Roosevelt Through Reagan."

"Now we'll have to see what they do with Estrada, Sutton, with the whole slew of them like McConnell," Goldman said.

Disability groups have organized against Sutton, who argued and won a case in which the Supreme Court ruled that state government employees cannot sue for discrimination under the Americans With Disabilities Act.

Groups like Americans United for Separation of Church and State oppose McConnell, who is recognized as a critic of abortion rights and church-state separation. Estrada is a partner in the Washington firm that represented Bush before the Supreme Court during his Florida recount fight with Al Gore.

Segregation Of Power; Gloves Are Off In Judicial Nomination War

The Columbus Dispatch
Sunday, August 19, 2001

The recent bald declaration by Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., that President Bush's nominees for federal judiciary posts would be subjected to outright ideological screening by the Democrat-controlled Senate ripped away the last shred of pretense about what has been going on for 20 years: Both parties use the confirmation process to block each other's nominees in the hope of creating a judiciary that reflects their concept of the proper role of the courts.

This fight has gotten more vicious and shrill for several reasons.

In the past 50 years, the power of state and federal courts has grown immensely, seriously altering the relative power of each of the three branches of government.

While the Founders intended that policy-making would be vested in the Congress and state legislatures elected by the people, courts increasingly have horned in on the legislative function, issuing rulings that make policy, rather than simply interpreting or judging the constitutionality of laws passed by legislatures. The U.S. Supreme Court's 1973 finding that there is a constitutional privacy right to abortion, for example, instantly overturned the legislatively enacted abortion bans then in place in most of the states. Federal courts also have taken over urban school districts in the name of ending segregation.

This change in the relationship of courts and legislatures has come about because there have been in the United States, for at least the past half century, two very different conceptions of government's role. The traditional viewpoint, based on the Founders' recognition of government's tendency to despotism, sees a system of checks and balances designed to limit the power of government.

Besides dividing power between different branches and levels of government, the Founders also vested policymaking power in a two- chamber legislature, in order to make the process slow and deliberate.

As a result, changes in the exercise of government power would be evolutionary rather than revolutionary, an impediment to demagogues and a buffer against the surges of sometimes irrational or liberty-threatening public opinion. The sheer ponderosity of the governing machinery would make it difficult for government to crush freedom quickly or easily.

But political activists chafe at the slow grinding of the democratic machinery, whose inertia not only protects liberty but also can be exploited to preserve and prolong unfair privilege and injustice.

The Founders' sound idea that states should retain rights and powers as a counterbalance to the federal government was dragged into disrepute when Southern states used this autonomy to first defend slavery and then government-sanctioned racial discrimination in the Jim Crow era.

Well-intentioned people determined to overcome such legislatively sanctioned impediments to racial equality sought a remedy in the expansion of federal power, including that of federal courts, to overcome state resistance.

Thus, in the name of a good cause, courts became a way to make an end run around the slow-moving or recalcitrant legislatures.

Today, many political activists prefer court briefs to ballots when seeking political change. They know that a ruling by one or a handful of unelected, unaccountable federal judges can can overrule or bypass Congress, 50 state legislatures and the nation's voters.

York Times

Neil Lewis New York Times

June 26, 2001

Road to Federal Bench Gets Bumpier in Senate

Neil Lewis

In a trice, the Founders' carefully crafted checks against concentration of power in a few hands are rendered null and void.

While this may seem acceptable when that power clearly is used for a good cause, such as freeing citizens from racial discrimination, it is far less acceptable when the issues are less clear-cut and the electorate is deeply divided, for example, with issues such as abortion, capital punishment and education. It is precisely these most troubling issues that should be ground slowly through the democratic process rather than being "settled" by judicial fiat.

The struggle for the soul of the federal courts pits those who believe democratic processes cannot be trusted to do the "right" thing against those who believe that allowing unelected, unaccountable judges to make public policy is an invitation to despotism and a subversion of democracy.

The place where these mutually exclusive views collide is the U.S. Senate. In the past, when there was less division over the role of the courts, it was Senate practice to confirm a president's judicial nominees without much fuss, providing the candidates were qualified and competent.

But Schumer's declaration of ideological warfare shows that that era is over. The problem is, his declaration also could be a recipe for disaster. If each party refuses to confirm the other's judicial nominees, the result could be paralysis of the federal courts, with devastating effects on millions of people affected by the decisions made -- or delayed -- in those courts.

At present, about 100 federal judgeships are unfilled; that's about one in eight. If the Senate cannot agree on the candidates needed to fill them, the shortage will grow worse.

The Dispatch long has argued that presidents are entitled to nominate people who share their governing philosophy, provided the nominees meet necessary standards of character and competence. The underlying assumption is that the voters who elected the president did so with the understanding and expectation that he would nominate like-minded people to federal posts.

Agreement on such an approach may be the only way a Senate divided so deeply by judicial philosophy can ever hope to keep the federal bench fully staffed so that the wheels of justice keep turning.

If each party refuses to confirm the other's judicial nominees, the result could be paralysis of the federal courts, with devastating effects on millions of people.

Misleading Impression

By Sheldon Goldman
The Courier-Journal
Friday, August 17, 2001

In the otherwise excellent and balanced news story appearing on Aug. 12 about the federal judicial nomination of David Bunning, I am quoted in a way that gives a misleading impression. As I told your reporter, I have no personal knowledge of David Bunning or his qualifications for office. I was merely responding in only a very general way to the questions posed to me. Bunning may well be among the most qualified persons available for the judgeship. My comments published in your story should not be taken to mean that I believe him either qualified or not qualified for office.

Government By Court Order

By Dana D. Kelley
The Arkansas Democrat-Gazette
Friday, August 17, 2001

Sue has become Lady Liberty's first name. It's the new American Way for governing. Forget the old saying, "It takes an act of Congress." The adage for the new millennium is "It takes a Supreme Court ruling."

If America seems to be more polar today on many social issues, it's because our law is often being made not by our elected representatives, but by unelected court justices. The former builds consensus, the latter resentment.

Back in the fall presidential election, Democratic candidate Al Gore warned women and pro-abortion supporters that a vote for Republican candidate George W. Bush was a vote to overturn Roe vs. Wade. As powerful as the leader of the world's sole superpower may be, however, not even he can single-handedly accomplish that feat. (It's noteworthy that Gore didn't propose actually putting the abortion question to a true popular vote.)

The implication, rather, was that the election of Bush was also the election, by privilege of political appointment, of conservative and presumably anti-abortion Supreme Court justices. It was thus tacitly acknowledged, with remarkably little protest, that the judiciary was more connected with abortion lawmaking than the legislative branch.

This problem--government by court order rather than by consent of the governed--is getting worse, not better. Currently, the U.S. Senate has confirmed only three of President Bush's 44 nominations for federal court judgeships, and some senators are openly promising an ideological fight for bench seats. New York's Charles Schumer said Democrats will deny nominees of "a particular ideological cast" so as not to "reorient the direction of the federal judiciary."

So now it appears that the job of senators is not to make the laws, but to make sure we get the right sort of judges to make the laws. Schumer and his colleagues understand all too well that it's a lot easier to get re-elected if the courts tackle all the really divisive issues.

The direction he refers to is increasingly activist, and nothing thwarts democracy like judicial activism. Even if the entire population of a town unanimously supported putting a Nativity scene on its courthouse lawn, the Supreme Court would order otherwise--not to protect any local citizens in the minority opinion, but to avoid the figurative "oppression" of any minority anywhere.

Activists call that liberty. A better name is tyranny. Rather than require petitioners whose cause is beyond the scope of the explicit constitutional language to utilize the amendment process, activist justices have literally taken the law into their own hands. Not since the grand age of monarchs have the opinions of so few outweighed the wishes of so many. Overwhelming majorities of Americans (1) support the death penalty, (2) oppose unregulated abortion on demand and (3) support public school prayer, and yet the Supreme Court has ruled contrary to public sentiment on each point. Worse yet, it's done so by playing "Twister" with legal precedents and history. That's what frustrates fair-minded folks so much.

Capital punishment is mentioned in the Constitution, and yet the court once ruled it unconstitutional. (Even today its constitutionality is micromanaged by the court.) Abortion, conversely, cannot be found in the document, but like the emperor's clothes, so many serious and important people pretend it's there that the simplistic lay-person is shouted down for even querying. And wherever the line separating church and state may fall today, there's no denying that at the time the Bill of Rights was drafted, nobody, including the authors, saw prayer in public school as a breach.

It's little wonder that there is a contentious attitude today toward lawyers and lawsuits. The nation's judiciary, originally intended to be the final arbiter when all else failed, has become the venue of first resort. Why undertake lobbying hundreds of legislators to pass a new law when convincing a handful of justices will get the existing law struck down? If the will of the people is wilted by the decree of the court, well, then, the people are wrong. Special-interest activists may have started us on the slippery slope to government by court order, but sly American spectators catch on quickly. One can ably argue that trial lawyers are in fact a special-interest group, but it's no longer just the lawyers who keep sharp eyes open for jackpot tort opportunities.

USA Today ran a story this week describing Wal-Mart's volume of lawsuits: The retailer was sued a staggering 4,851 times last year, about once every two hours.

Slip and fall in your house and you're just clumsy; do it in a Wal-Mart store and you're a victim of "neglect," which in the modern legal vernacular means you get to spin the judicial wheel of fortune.

There was also a small article in the Jonesboro Sun about a $ 2 million judgment against a student and a small college after the student, who was driving the plaintiff to a concert, had an automobile accident in which the plaintiff was seriously injured. Certainly, neither the college nor the driver had any intention of causing a car wreck. Fate is fickle. The plaintiff could easily have been driving and, being human, had the accident. Would he want to be sued under reverse circumstances?

We've all seen more than enough instances in which even self-inflicted human error is converted into a multimillion-dollar liability via the courts. Think McDonald's hot coffee. Or a Coke machine falling over on vandals trying to steal money from it. The lure of "big money," once only a cheesy game show phrase, has now achieved esquire status. If you're human, basically, you're potentially guilty--and liable. And you don't have to just worry about Big Brother watching. The sue-happy predator could be as close as the person riding next to you in your car.

Business As Usual

The New Republic

"Justice delayed is justice denied," Attorney General John Ashcroft told the American Bar Association's annual convention this week. The motivation for this pronouncement was Ashcroft's pique that the Senate "has moved slowly" in its consideration of President Bush's judicial nominees, resulting in a spate of vacancies that constitute "judicial emergencies." There are a few problems with Ashcroft's complaint. First, it's not true that the Senate has moved slowly: In less than eight months, it has approved about as many federal appeals court judges as it did in both Poppy's and Bill Clinton's entire first year in office, according to the Senate Judiciary Committee. But the greater problem with Ashcroft's indignation is its staggering hypocrisy: for almost no one in America bears greater responsibility for the current "judicial emergencies" than he does. When President Clinton nominated Ronnie White to become a district court judge in 1997, then-Senator Ashcroft blocked his nomination for two years before leading the campaign to kill it on the Senate floor. A year earlier, he placed a "hold" on Margaret Morrow's nomination to a California federal district court and opposed the confirmations of Merrick B. Garland, Frederica Massiah-Jackson, and Clarence Sundram. (Massiah-Jackson and Sundram, like White, never made it to the bench.) As one Ashcroft aide bragged to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch in 1997, "We're making business as usual impossible." Before Ashcroft chastises the Senate, he might want to consider his own record. Responsibility delayed is responsibility denied.

This change in the relationship of courts and legislatures has come about because there have been in the United States, for at least the past half century, two very different conceptions of government's role. The traditional viewpoint, based on the Founders' recognition of government's tendency to despotism, sees a system of checks and balances designed to limit the power of government.

Besides dividing power between different branches and levels of government, the Founders also vested policymaking power in a two- chamber legislature, in order to make the process slow and deliberate.

As a result, changes in the exercise of government power would be evolutionary rather than revolutionary, an impediment to demagogues and a buffer against the surges of sometimes irrational or liberty-threatening public opinion. The sheer ponderosity of the governing machinery would make it difficult for government to crush freedom quickly or easily.

But political activists chafe at the slow grinding of the democratic machinery, whose inertia not only protects liberty but also can be exploited to preserve and prolong unfair privilege and injustice.

The Founders' sound idea that states should retain rights and powers as a counterbalance to the federal government was dragged into disrepute when Southern states used this autonomy to first defend slavery and then government-sanctioned racial discrimination in the Jim Crow era.

Well-intentioned people determined to overcome such legislatively sanctioned impediments to racial equality sought a remedy in the expansion of federal power, including that of federal courts, to overcome state resistance.

Thus, in the name of a good cause, courts became a way to make an end run around the slow-moving or recalcitrant legislatures.

Today, many political activists prefer court briefs to ballots when seeking political change. They know that a ruling by one or a handful of unelected, unaccountable federal judges can can overrule or bypass Congress, 50 state legislatures and the nation's voters.

In a trice, the Founders' carefully crafted checks against concentration of power in a few hands are rendered null and void.

While this may seem acceptable when that power clearly is used for a good cause, such as freeing citizens from racial discrimination, it is far less acceptable when the issues are less clear-cut and the electorate is deeply divided, for example, with issues such as abortion, capital punishment and education. It is precisely these most troubling issues that should be ground slowly through the democratic process rather than being "settled" by judicial fiat.

The struggle for the soul of the federal courts pits those who believe democratic processes cannot be trusted to do the "right" thing against those who believe that allowing unelected, unaccountable judges to make public policy is an invitation to despotism and a subversion of democracy.

The place where these mutually exclusive views collide is the U.S. Senate. In the past, when there was less division over the role of the courts, it was Senate practice to confirm a president's judicial nominees without much fuss, providing the candidates were qualified and competent.

But Schumer's declaration of ideological warfare shows that that era is over. The problem is, his declaration also could be a recipe for disaster. If each party refuses to confirm the other's judicial nominees, the result could be paralysis of the federal courts, with devastating effects on millions of people affected by the decisions made -- or delayed -- in those courts.

At present, about 100 federal judgeships are unfilled; that's about one in eight. If the Senate cannot agree on the candidates needed to fill them, the shortage will grow worse.

The Dispatch long has argued that presidents are entitled to nominate people who share their governing philosophy, provided the nominees meet necessary standards of character and competence. The underlying assumption is that the voters who elected the president did so with the understanding and expectation that he would nominate like-minded people to federal posts.

Agreement on such an approach may be the only way a Senate divided so deeply by judicial philosophy can ever hope to keep the federal bench fully staffed so that the wheels of justice keep turning.

If each party refuses to confirm the other's judicial nominees, the result could be paralysis of the federal courts, with devastating effects on millions of people.

Misleading Impression

By Sheldon Goldman
The Courier-Journal
Friday, August 17, 2001

In the otherwise excellent and balanced news story appearing on Aug. 12 about the federal judicial nomination of David Bunning, I am quoted in a way that gives a misleading impression. As I told your reporter, I have no personal knowledge of David Bunning or his qualifications for office. I was merely responding in only a very general way to the questions posed to me. Bunning may well be among the most qualified persons available for the judgeship. My comments published in your story should not be taken to mean that I believe him either qualified or not qualified for office.

Government By Court Order

By Dana D. Kelley
The Arkansas Democrat-Gazette
Friday, August 17, 2001

Sue has become Lady Liberty's first name. It's the new American Way for governing. Forget the old saying, "It takes an act of Congress." The adage for the new millennium is "It takes a Supreme Court ruling."

If America seems to be more polar today on many social issues, it's because our law is often being made not by our elected representatives, but by unelected court justices. The former builds consensus, the latter resentment.

Back in the fall presidential election, Democratic candidate Al Gore warned women and pro-abortion supporters that a vote for Republican candidate George W. Bush was a vote to overturn Roe vs. Wade. As powerful as the leader of the world's sole superpower may be, however, not even he can single-handedly accomplish that feat. (It's noteworthy that Gore didn't propose actually putting the abortion question to a true popular vote.)

The implication, rather, was that the election of Bush was also the election, by privilege of political appointment, of conservative and presumably anti-abortion Supreme Court justices. It was thus tacitly acknowledged, with remarkably little protest, that the judiciary was more connected with abortion lawmaking than the legislative branch.

This problem--government by court order rather than by consent of the governed--is getting worse, not better. Currently, the U.S. Senate has confirmed only three of President Bush's 44 nominations for federal court judgeships, and some senators are openly promising an ideological fight for bench seats. New York's Charles Schumer said Democrats will deny nominees of "a particular ideological cast" so as not to "reorient the direction of the federal judiciary."

So now it appears that the job of senators is not to make the laws, but to make sure we get the right sort of judges to make the laws. Schumer and his colleagues understand all too well that it's a lot easier to get re-elected if the courts tackle all the really divisive issues.

The direction he refers to is increasingly activist, and nothing thwarts democracy like judicial activism. Even if the entire population of a town unanimously supported putting a Nativity scene on its courthouse lawn, the Supreme Court would order otherwise--not to protect any local citizens in the minority opinion, but to avoid the figurative "oppression" of any minority anywhere.

Activists call that liberty. A better name is tyranny. Rather than require petitioners whose cause is beyond the scope of the explicit constitutional language to utilize the amendment process, activist justices have literally taken the law into their own hands. Not since the grand age of monarchs have the opinions of so few outweighed the wishes of so many. Overwhelming majorities of Americans (1) support the death penalty, (2) oppose unregulated abortion on demand and (3) support public school prayer, and yet the Supreme Court has ruled contrary to public sentiment on each point. Worse yet, it's done so by playing "Twister" with legal precedents and history. That's what frustrates fair-minded folks so much.

Capital punishment is mentioned in the Constitution, and yet the court once ruled it unconstitutional. (Even today its constitutionality is micromanaged by the court.) Abortion, conversely, cannot be found in the document, but like the emperor's clothes, so many serious and important people pretend it's there that the simplistic lay-person is shouted down for even querying. And wherever the line separating church and state may fall today, there's no denying that at the time the Bill of Rights was drafted, nobody, including the authors, saw prayer in public school as a breach.

It's little wonder that there is a contentious attitude today toward lawyers and lawsuits. The nation's judiciary, originally intended to be the final arbiter when all else failed, has become the venue of first resort. Why undertake lobbying hundreds of legislators to pass a new law when convincing a handful of justices will get the existing law struck down? If the will of the people is wilted by the decree of the court, well, then, the people are wrong. Special-interest activists may have started us on the slippery slope to government by court order, but sly American spectators catch on quickly. One can ably argue that trial lawyers are in fact a special-interest group, but it's no longer just the lawyers who keep sharp eyes open for jackpot tort opportunities.

USA Today ran a story this week describing Wal-Mart's volume of lawsuits: The retailer was sued a staggering 4,851 times last year, about once every two hours.

Slip and fall in your house and you're just clumsy; do it in a Wal-Mart store and you're a victim of "neglect," which in the modern legal vernacular means you get to spin the judicial wheel of fortune.

There was also a small article in the Jonesboro Sun about a $ 2 million judgment against a student and a small college after the student, who was driving the plaintiff to a concert, had an automobile accident in which the plaintiff was seriously injured. Certainly, neither the college nor the driver had any intention of causing a car wreck. Fate is fickle. The plaintiff could easily have been driving and, being human, had the accident. Would he want to be sued under reverse

Beginning Friday, and continuing through all of next week, Libby, Morgan and I will all be out of town. While we are gone, Brent, Lori, and Jason will be filling in for us in the following ways:

Jason will be taking care of you guys. He will be doing OEOB mail, and helping with correspondence for you.

Lori will be filling in for Morgan (Red Tags, WW Correspondence) and me (Tim, LRM's). FYI Tim will also be out of town all of next week.

Brent will be taking care of the Judge.

REV_00131477

Office hours will be 8:00am-6:00pm, and longer as needed.

During that week, Tim (494-2451) and Libby (494-6925) will both have their cell phones, and I will leave numbers with Lori as to where you can reach Morgan, Laura, and myself.

Thanks,
ALR

Taking advantage of technological advances in electronic communications, IS&T is preparing to introduce another incremental enhancement to the White House's ability to provide information to the public through the use of an electronic mail system. Where they were originally only in paper format and delivered to the public by mail or picked up at an EEOB office, White House Press Releases are now being placed on the White House Web. IS&T staff wishes to improve upon this level of service and are preparing to design a new program that will permit the public to be placed on mailing lists to receive these press releases electronically and automatically. This system will allow the public to pre-select by type and by topic the releases of interest to them. On any occasion that such a press release is issued, it will automatically be emailed to the interested subscribers. Faster delivery, more choice and, once operational, requiring minimal staff involvement, the result will reap benefits for all parties concerned.

At a meeting August 21, 2001, representatives of IS&T, OA's Counsel Office, the Chief Of Staff, and the Office of Records Management, discussed how best to manage the records created when this system becomes operational. All parties were agreed that the daily process requires little documentation. What is released and who receives it is of little interest to the government administratively or historically. Such information has never been kept permanently by the White House Press Office. Even a review of the Federal Records Schedules, while not applicable to Presidential Records, do provide further confirmation that such information possesses no permanent value. GRS-14, Information Service Records, contains two items that are consistent with the group's position. Item 1 provides that "Requests for information and copies of replies therefore, involving no administrative actions, no policy decisions, and no special compilations or research and requests for and transmittals of publications, photographs, and other information literature," may be destroyed when 3 months old. Item 3 provides that "Press Service teletype news and similar materials" may similarly be destroyed when 3 months old. Kathryn Anderson, Deputy General Counsel for OA, in citing the GRS guidelines, pointed out that the White House is already keeping a record of the underlying document that will be requested/distributed via the new listserv program. As further insurance in the event of inquiries by government or public entities, she also noted that IS&T intends to capture via ARMS an e-mail of what was sent to which listserv subscriber on any given date. She offered the suggestion, in keeping with the intent of the GRS, that this could be destroyed when 3 months old if technologically feasible. Since the White House Office of Records Management and the IS&T staff are discussing the larger question of deleting electronic mail, this category of electronic communications could no doubt be included in these meetings. Being Presidential Records, the White House Counsel would, of course, provide the final legal guidance. Until such an agreement is reached, IS&T can retain this information without great difficulty or cost.

Taking advantage of technological advances in electronic communications, IS&T is preparing to introduce another incremental enhancement to the White House's ability to electronically disseminate information whitehouse.gov to the public. Whereas White House Press Releases, etc. were previously delivered to the public by mail or picked up at an EEOB office, White House Press Releases are now being placed on the White House website. IS&T staff wish to further improve upon this level of service and plan to utilize a list server that will permit the public to be placed on mailing lists to receive these press releases electronically and automatically. This system will allow the public to pre-select by type and by topic the releases of interest to them. On any occasion that such a press release is issued, it will automatically be emailed to the interested subscribers. Faster delivery, more choice and, once operational, requiring minimal staff involvement, the result will reap benefits for all parties concerned.

At a meeting August 21, 2001, representatives from IS&T, OA's Counsel Office, the Chief Of Staff, and the Office of Records Management (ORM), discussed how best to manage the records created when this system becomes operational. All parties were agreed that the daily request/transmittal process requires little documentation given that a record copy of the basic document that is being requested/transmitted will be retained by ORM . What is requested and to whom it is transmitted is of little interest to the government administratively or historically. Consequently, information of this type has never been kept permanently by the White House Press Office or ORM.

Even a review of the Federal Records Schedules, while not applicable to Presidential Records, generally recognizes that such information possesses no permanent value. In particular, GRS-14, Information Service Records, contains two items that are consistent with the group's position. Taking advantage of technological advances in electronic communications, IS&T is preparing to introduce another incremental enhancement to the White House's ability to provide information to the public through the use of an electronic mail system. Where they were originally only in paper format and delivered to the public by mail or picked up at an EEOB office, White House Press Releases are now being placed on the White House Web. IS&T staff wishes to improve upon this level of service and are preparing to design a new program that will permit the public to be placed on mailing lists to receive these press releases electronically and automatically. This system will allow the public to pre-select by type and by topic the releases of interest to them. On any occasion that such a press release is issued, it will automatically be emailed to the interested subscribers. Faster delivery, more choice and, once operational, requiring minimal staff involvement, the result will reap benefits for all parties concerned.

At a meeting August 21, 2001, representatives of IS&T, OA's Counsel Office, the Chief Of Staff, and the Office of Records Management, discussed how best to manage the records created when this system becomes operational. All parties were agreed that the daily process requires little documentation. What is released and who receives it is of little interest to the government administratively or historically. Such information has never been kept permanently by the White House Press Office. Even a review of the Federal Records Schedules, while not applicable to Presidential Records, do provide further confirmation that such information possesses no permanent value. GRS-14, Information Service Records, contains two items that are consistent with the group's position. Item 1 provides that "Requests for information and copies of replies therefore, involving no administrative actions, no policy decisions, and no special compilations or research and requests for and transmittals of publications, photographs, and other information literature," may be destroyed when 3 months old. Item 3 provides that "Press Service teletype news and similar materials" may similarly be destroyed when 3 months old. Kathryn Anderson, Deputy General Counsel for OA, in citing the GRS guidelines, pointed out that the White House is already keeping a record of the underlying document that will be requested/distributed via the new listserv program. As further insurance in the event of inquiries by government or public entities, she also noted that IS&T intends to capture via ARMS an e-mail of what was sent to which listserv subscriber on any given date. She offered the suggestion, in keeping with the intent of the GRS, that this could be destroyed when 3 months old if technologically feasible. Since the White House Office of Records Management and the IS&T staff are discussing the larger question of deleting electronic mail, this category of electronic communications could no doubt be included in these meetings. Being Presidential Records, the White House Counsel would, of course, provide the final legal guidance. Until such an agreement is reached, IS&T can retain this information without great difficulty or cost.

Taking advantage of technological advances in electronic communications, IS&T is preparing to introduce another incremental enhancement to the White House's ability to electronically disseminate information whitehouse.gov to the public. Whereas White House Press Releases, etc. were previously delivered to the public by mail or picked up at an EEOB office, White House Press Releases are now being placed on the White House website. IS&T staff wish to further improve upon this level of service and plan to utilize a list server that will permit the public to be placed on mailing lists to receive these press releases electronically and automatically. This system will allow the public to pre-select by type and by topic the releases of interest to them. On any occasion that such a press release is issued, it will automatically be emailed to the interested subscribers. Faster delivery, more choice and, once operational, requiring minimal staff involvement, the result will reap benefits for all parties concerned.

At a meeting August 21, 2001, representatives from IS&T, OA's Counsel Office, the Chief Of Staff, and the Office of Records Management (ORM), discussed how best to manage the records created when this system becomes operational. All parties were agreed that the daily request/transmittal process requires little documentation given that a record copy of the basic document that is being requested/transmitted will be retained by ORM . What is requested and to whom it is transmitted is of little interest to the government administratively or historically. Consequently, information of this type has never been kept permanently by the White House Press Office or ORM.

Even a review of the Federal Records Schedules, while not applicable to Presidential Records, generally recognizes that such information possesses no permanent value. In particular, GRS-14, Information Service Records, contains two items that are consistent with the group's position. Item 1 provides that "Requests for information and copies of replies therefore, involving no administrative actions, no policy decisions, and no special compilations or research and requests for and transmittals of publications, photographs, and other information literature," may be destroyed when 3 months old. Item 3 provides that "Press Service teletype news and similar materials" may similarly be destroyed when 3 months old. As further insurance in the event of inquiries by government or public entities, she also noted that IS&T intends to capture via ARMS an e-mail of what was sent to which listserv subscribers on any given date. She offered the suggestion, in keeping with the intent of the GRS, that this could be destroyed for the federal components of the EOP when 3 months old if technologically feasible. Since the ORM and the IS&T staff are discussing the larger question of deleting bulk electronic mail, this category of electronic communications could no doubt be included in these meetings. Being Presidential Records, the White House Counsel would, of course, provide the final legal guidance. Until such an agreement is reached, IS&T can retain this information without great difficulty or cost.

The Democratic chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee held a one-man hearing Wednesday on two of President Bush's judicial nominees. The session during Congress' August vacation came amid Republicans complaints that Democrats are delaying action on President Bush's appointments.

"I want to get the process moving," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. "I'm trying to go the extra mile by coming back for hearings today." He looked at the empty chairs next to him and said: "I hope that at least some of the Republicans who complained why don't we have more hearings will also get on an airplane and join us."

The rare midvacation hearing did not impress Republicans.

"While we welcome any efforts to finally move the process along, we're far behind where we should be at this point in President Bush's term," said Matt Latimer, spokesman for one GOP committee member, Arizona's Jon Kyl.

Under consideration Wednesday were Reggie Walton, a District of Columbia judge nominated for the federal bench, and Richard Nedelkoff, Bush's pick to be director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance at the Justice Department.

Only four of Bush's 44 judicial nominees have been confirmed.

"A lot of us are trying to restore dignity and regularity to the nominations process. ... We're trying to make the process move smoothly," Leahy said.

The White House said it would work with Leahy to move the nominations along.

"There really is a national interest in filling the vacancies that are in the judiciary, and the administration is hopeful that the Senate will take that interest seriously," Bush's spokesman Ari Fleischer said.

Just before the August recess all of president's 164 unconfirmed nominees were sent back to the White House by Senate Democrats because of a political tiff over two contentious nominees.

The move was procedural and senators in both parties expect Bush to renominate all of his candidates.

Senators not present Wednesday can submit questions to Walton and Nedelkoff until Aug. 31. Following the Senate's return after Labor Day, the committee will decide if the nominations will be sent to the full Senate for a vote.

Leahy has scheduled a hearing Aug. 27 to consider two more nominees.

Avoiding A Political Deadend On Judges

By Lloyd Cutler and Mickey Edwards

Scripps Howard News Service

Wednesday, August 22, 2001

Long before the President's first list of nominees to the federal courts arrived in the Senate, Senate Republicans and Democrats, and liberal and conservative organizations, were already at their battle stations. And it appears they remain there for the foreseeable future.

What used to be a fairly straightforward process - the nomination and confirmation of federal judges - has become more contested, acrimonious and time-consuming in recent years. According to research by the Constitution Project, the length of time from vacancy to confirmation has increased in every administration since President Ford's. It took the 105th Congress (1997-98) an average of 201 days to act on Clinton nominees. Consider that in 1922, when President Harding nominated George Sutherland, the Senate confirmed him within hours. In 1953, the Senate confirmed Earl Warren as Chief Justice without even questioning him.

The reasons for the change are not that complex. The number of federal judges has increased. The federal courts have been called upon to decide controversial social issues in such areas as school prayer, abortion, and affirmative action. This has, in turn, brought about increasing political pressure from interest groups that have proliferated dramatically in the last 20 years.

Two recent developments have further roiled partisan waters swirling around nominations. The first is the feeling of Democrats that Senate Republicans kept Clinton's court nominees bottled up in committee, sometimes for years, for ideological reasons. Republicans reply that Clinton was slow in getting nominations to the Senate. Both are right. It is also true that when a Republican holds the White House and the Democrats hold the Senate majority, the Democrats hold up judicial confirmations in presidential election years.

If Democratic senators hold to the principle of "an eye for an eye" and the Republicans hold to an absolute and exclusive presidential right to choose federal judges, the result will be an accelerating cycle of stalemate and polarization. In this scenario, the courts themselves cannot avoid being painted with accusations of partisanship. That would corrode popular belief in impartial justice and hence respect for the law.

Options are open to both sides to defuse the situation. First, they could agree upon a few principles based upon the recommendations of the Constitution Project:

One, candidates for judgeships should be committed to deciding cases based upon law and the facts of the case and should renounce ideological commitments.

Two, candidates should be nominated and confirmed based upon experience, qualifications, temperament, character and general views of the law and the judicial role.

Three, the president and the Senate must not ask for, and the candidate not offer or consent to give, any pre-commitments about unresolved cases or issues that may come before them as judges.

Four, all parties to the nomination and confirmation process should conduct themselves only in ways that reinforce the principle of judicial independence.

Fifth, diversity on the federal bench is consistent with judicial independence and should be a goal of the appointment process.

Sixth, the country is entitled to a viable and efficient federal court system. Candidates therefore should move through nomination, Senate hearings and floor vote expeditiously and fairly.

For the good of the country and the integrity of the courts, the president should seek the meaningful counsel of all parties before deciding on nominees. This he can certainly do without relinquishing his exclusive constitutional authority to nominate judicial candidates. For their part, Democrats should participate in such consultations with the sole condition that the nominee satisfy the broad judicial criteria enumerated above.

Finally, we would call upon various interest groups not to decide in advance that they will oppose or support all nominees that come from the White House. We should not demand pro-life or pro-choice judges but independent judges. We should not demand judges who are friendly to labor or business, but judges who are manifestly unbiased in either direction. We should not demand pro-environment or pro-development judges, but those who will look at the facts of the case, and decide in favor of the law, the Constitution and thus all the people of the United States.

Above all, we should seek agreement on nominees who can win confirmation under the existing political conditions. Unwavering dedication to the principle of judicial independence should be the legacy of the Bush administration and the 107th Congress. The public interest demands no less.

QUESTION: Senator Leahy today held a hearing attended only by himself, I think, on...

FLEISCHER: Then I'm sure there were no debates.

QUESTION: ... one of the president's judicial nominees. What does the White House feel about the pace of the Judicial Committee hearings on the president's nominees? And why did the president not request a holdover before the August break occurred, which would have then made it unnecessary for Senator Leahy to hold this hearing today?

FLEISCHER: Well, as far as the pace of the nominees go, this administration, even with a shortened transition, is way ahead of the pace of previous presidents in their first years -- President Clinton, President Bush or President Reagan -- in making nominations, including that to the federal courts.

The administration is going to work very hard and diligently with Senator Leahy to move forward on Senate confirmation of those nominees.

You know, that's really not a partisan issue, that's an issue about how to serve people who have a legitimate claim and need to go to court and don't want to wait in line for courtrooms to open up because there are no judges sitting in judgment. And that's why, whether you're a Democrat or you're a Republican, there really is a national interest in filling the vacancies that are in the judiciary, and the administration is hopeful that the Senate will take that interest seriously and will serve the public.

QUESTION: I mean you're comfortable with the pace, then, that the Senate has maintained?

FLEISCHER: I think we'll know more by the end of the year. In fairness, many of the nominations the administration made came in late July, and so the Senate's just taking a look at those now, and the Senate has every right for advice and consent, they're going to exercise their prerogatives.

I think it will be an interesting question to take a look at come October and November when Congress is ready to recess for the year. At that point, there'll be a serious burden on the Congress and on the United States Senate particularly to have taken action and passed the nominees so that the judiciary is not clogged and so there aren't vacancies when people expect to have their fair day in court.

The Democratic chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee held a one-man hearing Wednesday on two of President Bush's judicial nominees. The session during Congress' August vacation came amid Republicans complaints that Democrats are delaying action on President Bush's appointments.

"I want to get the process moving," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. "I'm trying to go the extra mile by coming back for hearings today." He looked at the empty chairs next to him and said: "I hope that at least some of the Republicans who complained why don't we have more hearings will also get on an airplane and join us."

The rare midvacation hearing did not impress Republicans.

"While we welcome any efforts to finally move the process along, we're far behind where we should be at this point in President Bush's term," said Matt Latimer, spokesman for one GOP committee member, Arizona's Jon Kyl.

Under consideration Wednesday were Reggie Walton, a District of Columbia judge nominated for the federal bench, and Richard Nedelkoff, Bush's pick to be director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance at the Justice Department.

Only four of Bush's 44 judicial nominees have been confirmed.

"A lot of us are trying to restore dignity and regularity to the nominations process. ... We're trying to make the process move smoothly," Leahy said.

The White House said it would work with Leahy to move the nominations along.

"There really is a national interest in filling the vacancies that are in the judiciary, and the administration is hopeful that the Senate will take that interest seriously," Bush's spokesman Ari Fleischer said.

Just before the August recess all of president's 164 unconfirmed nominees were sent back to the White House by Senate Democrats because of a political tiff over two contentious nominees.

The move was procedural and senators in both parties expect Bush to renominate all of his candidates.

Senators not present Wednesday can submit questions to Walton and Nedelkoff until Aug. 31. Following the Senate's return after Labor Day, the committee will decide if the nominations will be sent to the full Senate for a vote.

Leahy has scheduled a hearing Aug. 27 to consider two more nominees.

Avoiding A Political Deadend On Judges

By Lloyd Cutler and Mickey Edwards

Scripps Howard News Service

Wednesday, August 22, 2001

Long before the President's first list of nominees to the federal courts arrived in the Senate, Senate Republicans and Democrats, and liberal and conservative organizations, were already at their battle stations. And it appears they remain there for the foreseeable future.

What used to be a fairly straightforward process - the nomination and confirmation of federal judges - has become more contested, acrimonious and time-consuming in recent years. According to research by the Constitution Project, the length of time from vacancy to confirmation has increased in every administration since President Ford's. It took the 105th Congress (1997-98) an average of 201 days to act on Clinton nominees. Consider that in 1922, when President Harding nominated George Sutherland, the Senate confirmed him within hours. In 1953, the Senate confirmed Earl Warren as Chief Justice without even questioning him.

The reasons for the change are not that complex. The number of federal judges has increased. The federal courts have been called upon to decide controversial social issues in such areas as school prayer, abortion, and affirmative action. This has, in turn, brought about increasing political pressure from interest groups that have proliferated dramatically in the last 20 years.

Two recent developments have further roiled partisan waters swirling around nominations. The first is the feeling of Democrats that Senate Republicans kept Clinton's court nominees bottled up in committee, sometimes for years, for ideological reasons. Republicans reply that Clinton was slow in getting nominations to the Senate. Both are right. It is also true that when a Republican holds the White House and the Democrats hold the Senate majority, the Democrats hold up judicial confirmations in presidential election years.

If Democratic senators hold to the principle of "an eye for an eye" and the Republicans hold to an absolute and exclusive presidential right to choose federal judges, the result will be an accelerating cycle of stalemate and polarization. In this scenario, the courts themselves cannot avoid being painted with accusations of partisanship. That would corrode popular belief in impartial justice and hence respect for the law.

Options are open to both sides to defuse the situation. First, they could agree upon a few principles based upon the recommendations of the Constitution Project:

One, candidates for judgeships should be committed to deciding cases based upon law and the facts of the case and should renounce ideological commitments.

Two, candidates should be nominated and confirmed based upon experience, qualifications, temperament, character and general views of the law and the judicial role.

Three, the president and the Senate must not ask for, and the candidate not offer or consent to give, any pre-commitments about unresolved cases or issues that may come before them as judges.

Four, all parties to the nomination and confirmation process should conduct themselves only in ways that reinforce the principle of judicial independence.

Fifth, diversity on the federal bench is consistent with judicial independence and should be a goal of the appointment process.

Sixth, the country is entitled to a viable and efficient federal court system. Candidates therefore should move through nomination, Senate hearings and floor vote expeditiously and fairly.

For the good of the country and the integrity of the courts, the president should seek the meaningful counsel of all parties before deciding on nominees. This he can certainly do without relinquishing his exclusive constitutional authority to nominate judicial candidates. For their part, Democrats should participate in such consultations with the sole condition that the nominee satisfy the broad judicial criteria enumerated above.

Finally, we would call upon various interest groups not to decide in advance that they will oppose or support all nominees that come from the White House. We should not demand pro-life or pro-choice judges but independent judges. We should not demand judges who are friendly to labor or business, but judges who are manifestly unbiased in either direction. We should not demand pro-environment or pro-development judges, but those who will look at the facts of the case, and decide in favor of the law, the Constitution and thus all the people of the United States.

Above all, we should seek agreement on nominees who can win confirmation under the existing political conditions. Unwavering dedication to the principle of judicial independence should be the legacy of the Bush administration and the 107th Congress. The public interest demands no less.

QUESTION: Senator Leahy today held a hearing attended only by himself, I think, on...

FLEISCHER: Then I'm sure there were no debates.

QUESTION: ... one of the president's judicial nominees. What does the White House feel about the pace of the Judicial Committee hearings on the president's nominees? And why did the president not request a holdover before the August break occurred, which would have then made it unnecessary for Senator Leahy to hold this hearing today?

FLEISCHER: Well, as far as the pace of the nominees go, this administration, even with a shortened transition, is way ahead of the pace of previous presidents in their first years -- President Clinton, President Bush or President Reagan -- in making nominations, including that to the federal courts.

The administration is going to work very hard and diligently with Senator Leahy to move forward on Senate confirmation of those nominees.

You know, that's really not a partisan issue, that's an issue about how to serve people who have a legitimate claim and need to go to court and don't want to wait in line for courtrooms to open up because there are no judges sitting in judgment. And that's why, whether you're a Democrat or you're a Republican, there really is a national interest in filling the vacancies that are in the judiciary, and the administration is hopeful that the Senate will take that interest seriously and will serve the public.

QUESTION: I mean you're comfortable with the pace, then, that the Senate has maintained?

FLEISCHER: I think we'll know more by the end of the year. In fairness, many of the nominations the administration made came in late July, and so the Senate's just taking a look at those now, and the Senate has every right for advice and consent, they're going to exercise their prerogatives.

I think it will be an interesting question to take a look at come October and November when Congress is ready to recess for the year. At that point, there'll be a serious burden on the Congress and on the United States Senate particularly to have taken action and passed the nominees so that the judiciary is not clogged and so there aren't vacancies when people expect to have their fair day in court.

QUESTION: Senator Leahy today held a hearing attended only by himself, I think, on...

FLEISCHER: Then I'm sure there were no debates.

QUESTION: ... one of the president's judicial nominees. What does the White House feel about the pace of the Judicial Committee hearings on the president's nominees? And why did the president not request a holdover before the August break occurred, which would have then made it unnecessary for Senator Leahy to hold this hearing today?

FLEISCHER: Well, as far as the pace of the nominees go, this administration, even with a shortened transition, is way ahead of the pace of previous presidents in their first years -- President Clinton, President Bush or President Reagan -- in making nominations, including that to the federal courts.

The administration is going to work very hard and diligently with Senator Leahy to move forward on Senate confirmation of those nominees.

You know, that's really not a partisan issue, that's an issue about how to serve people who have a legitimate claim and need to go to court and don't want to wait in line for courtrooms to open up because there are no judges sitting in judgment. And that's why, whether you're a Democrat or you're a Republican, there really is a national interest in filling the vacancies that are in the judiciary, and the administration is hopeful that the Senate will take that interest seriously and will serve the public.

QUESTION: I mean you're comfortable with the pace, then, that the Senate has maintained?

FLEISCHER: I think we'll know more by the end of the year. In fairness, many of the nominations the administration made came in late July, and so the Senate's just taking a look at those now, and the Senate has every right for advice and consent, they're going to exercise their prerogatives.

I think it will be an interesting question to take a look at come October and November when Congress is ready to recess for the year. At that point, there'll be a serious burden on the Congress and on the United States Senate particularly to have taken action and passed the nominees so that the judiciary is not clogged and so there aren't vacancies when people expect to have their fair day in court.

I'm sorry for the group interview, but I'm not completely sure which one of you is the right person. Ellen Nakashima with the Washington Post has called the justice department to ask about where judicial interviews are conducted. She has heard that the interviews take place at the White House now rather than the Justice Department where they used to take place.

Is this true, can we confirm, and what are we possibly walking into?

We're looking for an index of documents that were sent, pursuant to 10/18/99 and 10/28/99 requests by the House Resource Committee, in November or December of 1999. Are there any records from then in the White House Counsel's office, or would we have to go to NARA or the Clinton Library?

For those of you who didn't believe me at lunch yesterday.....

I talked to Jerry Weeks in the security office about whether I needed to report foreign travel for security clearance purposes.

He told me to send him an e-mail stating where I had gone, for what reason, and for how long.

So there.

Many OLC opinions are in fact public. He should just be sure that he is quoting from public opinions.

Carl Esbeck @ DOJ is putting final touches on some testimony to Senate Judiciary re. charitable choice, and in one response he quotes liberally from an OLC opinion.

These opinions aren't generally public documents, are they?

Should Esbeck instead delete the specific reference to the OLC opinion while rephrasing the rationale?

Thanks.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

On

TELEWORK IN THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

SEPTEMBER 6, 2001

MR. CHAIRMAN AND MEMBERS OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE:

I APPRECIATE YOUR INVITATION TO COME HERE TODAY TO DISCUSS THE PROGRESS OPM HAS MADE SINCE MARCH IN PROMOTING TELEWORK WITHIN THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT. SECTION 359 OF PUBLIC LAW 106-346 GAVE OPM THE RESPONSIBILITY FOR LEADING AND MONITORING AGENCY TELEWORK EFFORTS, AND FOR HELPING AGENCIES TO INCREASE THEIR NUMBERS OF TELEWORKERS. WE TAKE OUR ROLE VERY SERIOUSLY AND ARE INTENSELY FOCUSED ON FULFILLING OUR RESPONSIBILITIES UNDER THE LAW.

ON MARCH 22, THEN-ACTING OPM DIRECTOR STEVE COHEN SHARED WITH YOU OUR INITIAL EFFORTS TO PROVIDE GUIDANCE AND ENCOURAGEMENT TO FEDERAL AGENCIES IN LIGHT OF THE ENACTMENT OF PUBLIC LAW 106-346. HE ALSO DISCUSSED PLANS FOR ASSESSING THE STATUS OF

TELEWORK IN THE FEDERAL

GOVERNMENT AND IDENTIFYING THE

BARRIERS AGENCIES ARE CONFRONTING AS THEY MOVE TO INCREASE TELEWORK PARTICIPATION. TODAY, I WILL DESCRIBE OUR ACTIVITIES SINCE THE MARCH HEARING, AS WELL AS UPCOMING INITIATIVES. I ALSO WILL DISCUSS STEPS OPM HAS TAKEN INTERNALLY TO INCREASE ITS OWN NUMBER OF TELEWORKERS TO BECOME THE MODEL TELEWORK AGENCY.

AGENCIES WERE SURVEYED IN APRIL. THE RESULTS OF THE SURVEY WERE INCLUDED IN THE "INTERIM REPORT ON THE STATUS OF TELEWORK IN THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT," WHICH OPM PROVIDED TO REPRESENTATIVE WOLF ON JULY 6TH, AT HIS REQUEST. AS WAS INDICATED IN OUR INTERIM REPORT, SUBSTANTIAL ADVANCES IN TELECOMMUTING REQUIRE VERY SIGNIFICANT CULTURE CHANGES WITHIN ORGANIZATIONS. THIS IS A LONG-TERM ENDEAVOR, WITH THE POTENTIAL TO SIGNIFICANTLY CHANGE THE WAY THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CONDUCTS AND CARRIES OUT ITS BUSINESS. I BELIEVE FEDERAL AGENCIES ARE MAKING MORE PROGRESS THAN IS YET REFLECTED IN THE NUMBERS OF TELEWORKERS REPORTED TO US.

OUR APRIL SURVEY IDENTIFIED 76 AGENCIES THAT HAVE TELEWORK POLICIES IN PLACE THAT COVER THE MAJORITY OF THEIR EMPLOYEES. ONLY 18 AGENCIES REPORTED HAVING NO TELEWORK POLICIES IN PLACE AT THAT TIME. AGENCY POLICIES COVER MORE THAN 1.5 MILLION EMPLOYEES – NEARLY 90 PERCENT OF ALL EMPLOYEES WORKING IN THOSE 76 AGENCIES WITH TELEWORK POLICIES IN PLACE.

WE BELIEVE THAT THE DATA REPORTED IN OUR APRIL SURVEY REFLECT AN

UNDERCOUNT OF ACTUAL TELECOMMUTING PRACTICES
WITHIN AGENCIES.

MEANWHILE, AGENCIES ARE DESIGNING THEIR OWN SOLUTIONS TO THE TRACKING CHALLENGE. SOME AGENCIES INCORPORATE DATA ELEMENTS FOR TRACKING TELEWORKERS IN THEIR PERSONNEL OR PAYROLL SYSTEMS. OTHER AGENCIES ARE FOLLOWING OPM GUIDANCE TO ENTER INTO FORMAL WRITTEN AGREEMENTS WITH ALL TELEWORKERS. THIS PRACTICE OFFERS A STRAIGHTFORWARD TOOL FOR TRACKING TELEWORKERS. OUR SURVEY TO BE CONDUCTED LATER THIS YEAR WILL NO DOUBT PROVIDE BETTER DATA AND HELP REFINE CALCULATIONS OF TELEWORK UTILIZATION.

THE APRIL SURVEY INDICATES THAT THE PERCENTAGE OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES WHO TELECOMMUTE AT LEAST ONE DAY PER WEEK, ON AVERAGE, HAS NEARLY DOUBLED SINCE 1998. BUT, THE PERCENTAGE IS STILL SMALL – 2.6 PERCENT TODAY, COMPARED TO 1.4 PERCENT IN 1998. GENERALLY, THE HIGHEST USE OF TELEWORK OCCURS IN THE SMALLEST AGENCIES – THAT IS, THOSE WITH FEWER THAN 300 EMPLOYEES.

I WOULD NOW LIKE TO TAKE A MOMENT TO DISCUSS OPM'S INTERNAL TELEWORK EFFORTS. IN APRIL, 207 EMPLOYEES WERE TELEWORKING AT LEAST 52 DAYS PER YEAR, WITH MOST DOING SO ON A REGULARLY

SCHEDULED BASIS OF AT LEAST ONE ⁴

DAY PER WEEK. OUR AGENCY

IMPLEMENTED ITS TELEWORK POLICY ON FEBRUARY 1ST OF THIS YEAR, COVERING ALL EMPLOYEES. OPM EMPLOYEES AND THEIR MANAGERS AND SUPERVISORS HAVE ATTENDED TELEWORK TRAINING. TODAY, WE HAVE 240 EMPLOYEES TELEWORKING AT LEAST 52 DAYS PER YEAR, A 16 PERCENT INCREASE. OVERALL, THESE 240 TELEWORKERS REPRESENT 6.9 PERCENT OF OUR WORKFORCE. WE SHOULD NOTE THAT OPM SUPERVISORS AND MANAGERS REPORT A SIGNIFICANT NUMBER OF INTERMITTENT TELEWORKERS—915. THESE EMPLOYEES TELEWORK LESS THAN 52 DAYS A YEAR, IN MANY CASES SCHEDULED AROUND SPECIFIC PROJECTS. TAKEN TOGETHER OPM HAS 1,155 TELEWORKERS, OR 30 PERCENT OF ITS WORKFORCE TELECOMMUTING.

OPM HAS ENGAGED IN A NUMBER OF SPECIFIC ACTIVITIES THAT HAVE ASSISTED AGENCIES IN MOVING FORWARD TO INCREASE THEIR TELEWORK PARTICIPATION.

- WE ARE SHARING BEST PRACTICES AND AGGRESSIVELY MARKETING TELEWORK TO FEDERAL AGENCIES. WE PROVIDED AGENCIES WITH OUR RECENT STUDY ON TELEWORK—A COMPENDIUM OF SUCCESSFUL TELEWORK STORIES THAT ILLUSTRATES HOW FEDERAL AGENCIES HAVE OVERCOME COMMON TELEWORK BARRIERS. WE ALSO ARE ADVERTISING OPM’S CAPACITY TO MAKE PRESENTATIONS ON TELEWORK, AND WE ARE IN HIGH DEMAND TO GIVE PRESENTATIONS TO AGENCY PERSONNEL.
- IN LATE JUNE, OPM AND GSA LAUNCHED A JOINT WEBSITE TO MAKE IT SIMPLER FOR AGENCIES TO FIND ALL THE INFORMATION THEY NEED ABOUT TELECOMMUTING AT ONE LOCATION. A WIDE ARRAY OF RESOURCES CAN BE ACCESSED FOR EFFECTIVE TELEWORK MANAGEMENT INCLUDING: SAMPLE TELEWORK POLICIES, GUIDELINES FOR DESIGNING AND IMPLEMENTING TELEWORK PROGRAMS, RESEARCH FINDINGS AND SUCCESS STORIES, ANSWERS TO FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS, LINKS TO FEDERAL TELEWORK

CENTERS, AND CURRENT NEWS⁵ RELATING TO FEDERAL TELEWORK INITIATIVES.

- OUR GUIDANCE TO AGENCIES TAKES A PROACTIVE APPROACH THAT SEEKS TO EXTEND TELEWORK TO THE WIDEST RANGE OF EMPLOYEES POSSIBLE. WE ADVISE AGENCIES TO BEGIN WITH A PRESUMPTION THAT ALL POSITIONS ARE APPROPRIATE FOR TELEWORK. THIS POSITIVE ANALYTICAL APPROACH FOCUSES MANAGERS' ATTENTION ON THE NATURE OF THE WORK AND JOB CHARACTERISTICS FOR DETERMINING WHETHER A POSITION IS SUITABLE FOR TELEWORK. IN MANY CASES, NOT ALL ASPECTS OF A POSITION WILL BE SUITABLE FOR TELEWORK. HOWEVER, THE FOCUS ON DISCRETE JOB TASKS WORKS TO IDENTIFY THOSE TASKS THAT CAN BE PERFORMED AWAY FROM THE OFFICE AND SERVES TO INCREASE ACTUAL TELEWORK PARTICIPATION.
- AN INTER-AGENCY TRAINING CONSORTIUM WILL DEVELOP AN INTERNET-BASED TRAINING MODULE BY NOVEMBER OF THIS YEAR. THIS TRAINING MODULE WILL HELP BREAK DOWN THE MAJOR BARRIERS TO TELEWORK—MANAGER RESISTENCE AND EMPLOYEE FEARS.
- ALONG WITH GSA, OPM PROVIDES LEADERSHIP TO THE INTERAGENCY TELEWORK ISSUES WORKING GROUP, WHICH WAS FORMED IN SEPTEMBER 2000. THE GROUP, WHICH INCLUDES REPRESENTATIVES FROM 17 FEDERAL AGENCIES, IS CURRENTLY FINALIZING TELEWORK POLICY AND GUIDANCE RECOMMENDATIONS IN THE AREAS OF: DATA SECURITY AND PROTECTION; COMPUTER EQUIPMENT AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS; LEGAL AND PROCUREMENT ISSUES; HUMAN RESOURCES MANAGEMENT ISSUES; CONTINUITY OF OPERATIONS; HEALTH AND SAFETY ISSUES; TAXES; AND TRAINING. THE WORK GROUP WILL PRESENT ITS RECOMMENDATIONS TO OPM AND GSA THIS FALL.
- WE HAVE CONTACTED THOSE AGENCIES THAT REPORTED HAVING NO OR ONLY DRAFT POLICIES IN PLACE AT THE TIME OF OUR APRIL SURVEY. I AM PLEASED TO REPORT THAT WE WERE TOLD THAT CONSIDERABLE PROGRESS IS BEING MADE TOWARD FORMALIZING AND FULLY IMPLEMENTING TELEWORK POLICIES WHERE NONE PREVIOUSLY EXISTED.

ALTHOUGH I BELIEVE FEDERAL AGENCY PROGRESS HAS BEEN SIGNIFICANT,

I AM NOT SATISFIED WITH WHERE

THE AGENCIES ARE TODAY.

MANAGEMENT RELUCTANCE AND EMPLOYEE FEARS ARE TWO MAJOR BARRIERS TO TELEWORK IMPLEMENTATION. OUR NEXT STEPS FOCUS ON THESE BARRIERS AND INCLUDE THE FOLLOWING ACTIVITIES:

- A TELEWORK LEADERSHIP SEMINAR FOR TOP LEVEL AGENCY OFFICIALS IS SCHEDULED FOR OCTOBER. MAXIMUM TELEWORK PARTICIPATION WILL REQUIRE A CULTURAL CHANGE AND TOP AGENCY MANAGEMENT LEADERSHIP IS THE CRUCIAL INGREDIENT FOR SUCCESS. THE LEADERSHIP SEMINAR WILL HELP FOCUS ON THE BENEFITS OF TELEWORK TO THE EMPLOYER, THE EMPLOYEE, AND THE ENVIRONMENT.
- FOLLOWING THE LEADERSHIP SEMINAR, A SATELLITE EDUCATIONAL BROADCAST TO FEDERAL FACILITIES NATIONWIDE WILL REACH THOUSANDS OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES IN NOVEMBER. IT WILL PROVIDE EXAMPLES OF FEDERAL TELEWORK SUCCESS STORIES.
- WE WILL FOLLOW-UP WITH A CONFERENCE IN JANUARY AIMED AT AGENCY SUPERVISORS AND MANAGERS.
- A "GUIDE FOR MANAGERS AND SUPERVISORS" WILL BE PUBLISHED IN THE FALL.
- FINALLY, WE ARE HELPING AGENCIES EVALUATE PROGRESS IN IMPLEMENTING TELEWORK. OUR OBJECTIVE IS TO ASSIST AGENCIES WITH THE ASSESSMENT OF THE IMPACT OF TELEWORK ON PRODUCTIVITY, RECRUITMENT, WORKFORCE STABILITY AND MORALE. DEMONSTRATED BENEFITS WILL HELP CHANGE THE PERSPECTIVES OF MANAGERS WHO REMAIN UNCONVINCED THAT TELEWORK PROGRAMS CAN ASSIST THEM WITH THEIR HUMAN CAPITAL CHALLENGES.

MR. CHAIRMAN, I BELIEVE THAT TELEWORK IS GOOD FOR BUSINESS, EMPLOYEES AND THE ENVIRONMENT. IT CAN IMPROVE PRODUCTIVITY, FOCUS ORGANIZATIONAL ATTENTION ON OUTCOMES AND RESULTS VERSUS PROCESS, AND SERVE AS A POTENT RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION TOOL FOR TODAY'S WORKFORCE.

TELEWORK HELPS EMPLOYEES

BALANCE WORK AND FAMILY RESPONSIBILITIES AND EXPANDS WORK OPPORTUNITIES FOR THE DISABLED. AND, TELEWORK ADDRESSES LOCAL TRANSPORTATION AND ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES BY DECREASING TRAFFIC CONGESTION AND ENERGY USE, THUS IMPROVING AIR QUALITY. I COMMIT TO YOU OUR CONTINUED SUPPORT FOR THIS IMPORTANT INITIATIVE.

THANK YOU AGAIN FOR INVITING ME, MR. CHAIRMAN. I WOULD BE HAPPY TO RESPOND TO ANY QUESTIONS.

Hi guys -- I am looking for some clarification of the WH's interaction with the ABA. As best as I can tell from the attachment to the 8/23 letter that Judge

Gonzalez sent to Sen. Leahy, the WH (or perhaps DOJ?) faxes to the ABA a nominee's Senate questionnaire on a date subsequent to his or her nomination.

This is what the 4th column on the chart appears to indicate for nominees for whom the ABA has not submitted ratings yet. Is my understanding accurate?

Courtney --

Mrs. Bush is going to be doing some RNC-sponsored political events in September and October (election events). I just want to be sure I understand what we can and can't do from this office. For the most part, political is setting everything up -- and RNC is hiring a team to do the events -- the only thing we are doing is OKing the invitation and sending her Aide with her. Can we use an AF plane and bill them for it or do they need to find transportation for us? Anything else we should know?

Califano's outrageous op-ed in this morning's Washington Post needs a strong response. This is the second op-ed the Post has run on the Dem side of this issue (the first was Sheldon Goldman's which, although nominally on our side, suggested that there was equivalence between current Dem obstructionism and past Repub obstructionism) and, apart from a short editorial, there's been no answering fire. Califano's basic pitch is that because there is so much activism in the federal courts, the judiciary has become a de facto policymaker and appointments should therefore be politicized up and down the line. This is like the old definition of chutzpah that Judge Silberman likes: the boy who murders his parents and then seeks mercy on the ground that he is an orphan.

I strongly recommend that you pen such a response. You will automatically get published given your job title, and our efforts to organize others to do these things (Senators, third parties) have so far been unsuccessful. Schumer will undoubtedly have another op-ed or two appearing on Tuesday in conjunction with his "burden" hearing just as he did with his "ideology" hearing, and we cannot afford to cede the field of the editorial pages to the other side.

The Senate folks should also think about crafting our communications strategy for the Tuesday hearing. In addition to Senator's statements at the hearing, it may make sense to background some reporters and editorial writers on our perspective about the hidden agenda animating the Tuesday hearing.

Presidential Record Act

The deadline for releasing the Reagan records is today. When should we expect that?

- A. Under the Presidential Records Act of 1978, certain presidential records will be authorized for release. Because this is the first time this portion of the Act will be in effect, the Administration has carefully studied and analyzed the procedural questions related to the release of documents. We want to ensure that a proper procedure is established for this and all future release of presidential records.

Later today, we'll have more information about the next steps for the Administration and the Archivist related to the releasing presidential records.

I think it is useful for us to keep tabs on. It provides a kind of early warning system on issues the press is examining. I recommend asking for such a report.

As part of Cabinet report submissions, we are receiving information on key or significant FOIA requests received by the agencies. The staff secretary does not want to include these in the official cabinet report to the President - but is this information that you all would find useful? We could cut this into a separate FOIA report and send it to your shop - if there is an interest. Please let me know - thanks

Subject: Sept 16 mexican Independence Day at the White House

Karl is suggesting we hold our Mexican Independence Day celebration at the White House similar to the one we held for Cinco de Mayo. We will need to fund 10K for stage, entertainment and lighting. What are the legalities involved in either raising this money by donations or asking the RNC?

I just left you a voice message regarding retaining stuff for eventual transfer to Records Mgt. The question was do the same standards apply to NEC (OPD) as to the WH? Now I realize it's a bit more complicated. I work for Chuck Blahous who is both SA to POTUS for Econ Policy (NEC) and Exec Dir of the Commission to Strengthen Social Security. Do different standards apply to the two positions, and if so, what are they? Thanks for any light you can shed.

The same rules apply to NEC and White House Office. I would recommend that you abide by those rules. Please call with any questions at 6-7984.

Brett,
Per my voicemail, are you available to meet with Burton's staff tomorrow or Thursday late afternoon (or evening) to walk them through arguments supporting claiming exec privilege? We can do it here at DOJ or at your office.

Paul C., John - Brett will want OLC there.

It looks like we are going to meet internally at 5:30 pm today to develop our plan. Included in our discussion will be OLC drafting a memo from the AG to POTUS re. claiming privilege. Would you prefer being patched in via speaker phone or briefed after?

Sheila Joy is normally the person, but for the Tax Court, Laura Flippin, our Clearance Counsel, has been handling the forms. Tax Court goes through the Finance Committee and is an Article I appointment, so those have been handled differently. Give Laura a call at 6-6750.

Subject: Clearance Forms

I am told that DOJ sends the clearance forms to our judicial candidates that POTUS has approved. Who can verify that forms have been sent to Francis Cramer, the guy approved for the U.S. Tax Court? The President approved him last Friday -- Cramer was in that book that went to Texas but didn't get POTUS approval until it made its way back here.

A number of new employees have entered service in the White House Office since the last time ethics training for White House Office employees was offered, which was in April. Therefore, I have scheduled ethics training in Room 450 in the Old Executive Office Building on the following dates:

Wednesday, September 12 from 10-11 am
Wednesday, September 19 from 10-11 am
Wednesday, September 26 from 10-11 am

All White House Office employees are required to attend ethics training. If you receive this message but previously attended ethics training in Room 450, I do not have a record of your attendance. If you think you have previously attended ethics training in Room 450, please let me know. (Please do not confuse ethics training with the security briefing you would have received upon entering service.) You are requested to attend even if you have received individualized counseling on ethics matters.

In light of today's Washington Post front-page story on the Bush Administration's new contracting preferences for minority firms, I am really glad we managed to kill that one paragraph from the minority-businesses proclamation. Do you ever get the sense that we're working on the leaves, while the forest blooms.

My understanding is that they are going to reimburse CMS for the use of their plane, which CMS charters. I agree this sounds a little fishy. It may be worthwhile for one of you to call the Michigan Party to determine exactly what they are paying for and how it's being reported. Thanks. I would be happy to facilitate the call.

This does not sound right to me. CMS Energy has an air charter business? Why doesn't the Michigan GOP charter a plane from an air charter business instead?

The Michigan GOP will charter a plane from CMS Energy in Michigan. They will pay for the charter outright, but they were planning on having Norm Saari, Director of Govt. Affairs ride along (how convenient and nice of them to ask first??).

Moose, can you give us direction on this one? Thanks.

Per Brett Kavanaugh, I understand that you would like to add a couple of positions to the policy memo we are preparing which outlines official travelers. I assume this would be the Business Manager and IS rep on each trip, but please confirm.

Thank you,
Merrill

Kate--

Per Brett Kavanaugh, I understand that you would like to add a couple of positions to the policy memo we are preparing which outlines official travelers. I assume this would be the Business Manager and IS rep on each trip, but please confirm.

Thank you,
Merrill

This does not sound right to me. CMS Energy has an air charter business? Why doesn't the Michigan GOP charter a plane from an air charter business instead?

Subject: Mackinaw conference

The Michigan GOP will charter a plane from CMS Energy in Michigan. They will pay for the charter outright, but they were planning on having Norm Saari, Director of Govt. Affairs ride along (how convenient and nice of them to ask first??).

Moose, can you give us direction on this one? Thanks.

FYI that the Judge and Tim will be meeting with the new Pres of ABA on Monday at 2:00 pm. Participants from ABA are: ABA Pres. Robert Hirshon, Federal Judiciary Committee Chair Roscoe Trimmier & Dir. of Govt. Rel. Robert Evans ABA indicated their topics of discussion will include their role in judicial selection and Legal Services Corp.

Courtney - can you provide some talking points for Judge and Tim on issue(s) you think the ABA may raise re: LSC? Reminder that our LSC Meeting is set for 9/26 at 3:00 pm.

Thanks!

The Judge said that he would rather not have the intent to nominate announced today. Waiting until Monday is his preference.

Brad - you will confirm this with press and let me know if the horse is already out of the gate on this, please?

what do you think about this one. This looks like an individual.
Assuming he is retired (with no business before the Government) and owns the plane himself, I am inclined to go along with it. This is a different trip than the Mich. trip.

Susan if this doesn't work, we'll have to have the party pay for a charter or fly him commercially out Sunday morning - The charter will cost them $6800, which is causing heartache, but we can make them do it.

Mike Cudahy. He formally owned Marquette Electronics which produced medical equipment. He sold the company to GE. We're checking to see if he's involved in anything else.

|Here's we stand this morning - RPW has one last option for a private plane
|which we'll follow up on first thing. After that we have the charter
|option.

|| We both have

||Ideally, I can

Do we know these people will speak on Gene's behalf? Is Brett coordinating with Gene? (I just want to make sure we don't have too many cooks in the WHCO kitchen).

I mentioned it in passing to Brett as well and he sent me the names of two individuals who are former Solicitors at Labor.
The more names and numbers the better - I'm sure there will be additional stories coming.

Brent, Jason and Lori -

REV_00131799

- õ You need to be near your phones/at your desk as much as possible for the rest of the week- this includes lunch time. Call over and let us know before you leave for the day.
- õ If we can't locate one of the attorneys we will be calling one of you to track them down so try and keep up with their schedules and locations.
- õ Make sure fax machines are all operable and that supplies are adequately stocked.
- õ You need to be in by 7:30 a.m. and leave no earlier than 6:30 p.m.
- õ Traffic to the West Wing should be kept to a minimum
- õ Communication to non-White House staff about fellow staff members whereabouts and activities should be made in cases of necessity only.

Attorneys- let the staff know your whereabouts as much as possible.

Thanks!

I just left a message for him. I have been dealing with OLC on this (as has Noel), although I know and knew nothing about this DOL memo. I will check with Willett as well.

Subject: Re: Faith-Based Memo from DOL

I have a feeling that this issue wasn't assigned to anyone over here, because I got the same inquiry from Howard a couple weeks ago and sent out a similar e-mail to everyone in this office, and obviously no one has called Howard about it yet.

Subject: Faith-Based Memo from DOL

The Solicitor's Office at DOL called to see what ever happened with the memo they sent over on the constitutionality of certain faith-based programs. They said Stuart was the original recipient. Could whoever is handling this now call Howard Radzley's assistant 202-693-5271. Thanks.

But you will note that the part of the NATO treaty that they are going to act under is the collective self-defense.

You asked me to look into the "energy consequences" that would be caused by excluding liquid natural gas tankers from delivering to our ports. A source at the DOE tells me that the effect would be "inconsequential"; the gas supplied by the tankers represent less than 1% of the country's natural gas supply.

You also asked whether we could legally exclude the gas. I am still looking into that, and will get back to you on it.

Bob:

In response to your question about what the DOJ and/or FTC is doing to address the gasoline price gouging since yesterday:

As I mentioned earlier, when I contacted DOJ Antitrust Division, they informed that this is an FTC issue if it's an antitrust issue at all.

The FTC tells me that they will probably not be doing much to respond to the price gouging reports because these isolated incidents of price gouging don't appear to involve collusive behavior. As you know, a unilateral price increase by one gasoline station is not a violation of antitrust law.

This is what the FTC has been doing:

They have been consulting with their regional offices to collect information about price gouging. There have been sporadic reports of price spikes from several Midwestern states, Kentucky, Texas, and maybe other states. The price increases appear to have occurred when independent gasoline retailers were looking to make a quick buck. There was only a brief blip upward in barrel prices, and refiners didn't raise prices. It appears that many of the retailers who increased prices have already lowered them as a result of consumer complaints and governmental inquiries into the issue.

The FTC plans to issue a press release tomorrow which basically will reiterate what the Dep't of Energy has already said; that the DOE has found no justification for price increases, that consumers should shop around, and that consumers can call the DOE's consumer complaint hotline. They will also say that the FTC will consult with DOE as complaints are received and that matters more appropriately dealt with at the state and local levels will be referred to the appropriate officials.

In addition, state and local officials have been responding to complaints. Several states, such as Florida, have anti-price-gouging laws designed to prevent retailers from price-gouging during natural disasters, and these laws might be construed to prevent gasoline retailers from price gouging during this disaster.

Let me know if you need more information.

Carlos and I have another issue and I am wondering if you can help us with this too:

The airlines generally are going to have serious solvency issues and they are going to have to change their schedules drastically because of the increased security. They are estimating a 10-15%. They have asked for is temporary anti-trust immunity (for 6 months) so they can coordinate schedules to ensure continued service to all markets. This obviously implicates DOJ/Antitrust issues and we need some help looking at this. Are you guys the ones to ask, or is there a designated DOJ or antitrust person -- or should I funnel this through Tim. Thanks!

REV_00131842

Here are some thoughts on a Presidential relief fund:

Many individuals and organizations have contacted the White House about making donations or in assisting fundraising efforts. Potential donors are currently being referred to private charities and relief funds. This follows the traditional manner of dealing with disaster relief efforts. However, by virtue of broad gift acceptance authority in the Stafford Act, there are other options.

Below are three options, each of which is legally feasible. Any fund would involve a separate account at the U.S. Treasury. Options one and two would require significant consultation with Congress because of the concern that private money would be used to pay obligations properly paid for by appropriated funds. Option three is a simplified model of a fund that FEMA already has in place. FEMA does not promote or use their existing fund in a significant way because of limitations on the use of the fund and administrative complexities. There would be no bar to solicitation with respect to the use of any of these options. Themes and variations can be developed on any option in terms of who sets a fund up and who administers it.

1. The President sets up a disaster relief fund for the purpose of funding any expense associated with the disaster relief effort (including reimbursement of Federal agencies, State and local governments, and private entities). Disbursements would be made by the OMB Director (after consultation with FEMA Director and other agency heads).
2. The President sets up a disaster relief fund to act as a collection point for disbursement to certain identified organizations: such as the American Red Cross; the Salvation Army; and the World Trade Center Relief Fund. Disbursements would be made either by formula or by the exercise of discretion of (a) the FEMA Director or (b) the OMB Director (after consultation with the FEMA Director and other agency heads).
3. The President sets up a disaster relief fund to be used for the very limited purpose of providing for disaster-related needs that have not been or will not be met by Governmental agencies or any other organizations receiving Government funds. Disbursements would be handled by either the FEMA Director or the OMB Director.

Reasons for: the President can use his office to inspire and unify Americans; can provide a Governmental outlet for the American people to show support; and can assist in raising substantial amounts of money for relief efforts.

Reasons against: the concern that private money would be used to pay obligations properly paid for by appropriated funds; that taxpayers would feel that they are being double-billed; and that a perception might be created that the Government does not have the money to pay for the effort.

In my view, there is an opportunity for positive action here.

Carlos and I have another issue and I am wondering if you can help us with this too:

The airlines generally are going to have serious solvency issues and they are going to have to change their schedules drastically because of the increased security. They are estimating a 10-15%. They have asked for is temporary anti-trust immunity (for 6 months) so they can coordinate schedules to ensure continued service to all markets. This obviously implicates DOJ/Antitrust issues and we need some help looking at this. Are you guys the ones to ask, or is there a designated DOJ or antitrust person -- or should I funnel this through Tim. Thanks!

There is no need for an auto-pen for the President's signature, as opposed to Harriet's signing for him, in light of principles articulated in long-standing OLC opinions. As such, the auto-pen operator is not essential personnel.

Tim,

I understand that you asked OLC (John Yoo) to look at the two issues that you asked me to address: insurance coverage and forbearance on payments. I coincidentally called John to discuss one of the two issues, and he said that you had already spoken with him. We are coordinating our efforts.

John mentioned that it is useful for him to know who in the Counsel's Office is working on a matter, so that he knows to whom to talk for further information and to whom to send any final product.

So if anyone is working on a legal question, you might touch base with John Yoo to see who at OLC is addressing the question.

Subject: Issue briefing memo for Andy Card

Per our meeting last night, I will coordinate the preparation of an issue briefing memo from the Judge to Andy Card. The issues to be covered, and those with primary responsibility for delivering the memo contents on those issues, are as follows:

1. Airline liability issues (Brett and Noel);
2. Insurance coverage issues (Courtney);
3. Antitrust exemption for airlines (Courtney);
4. Terrorist asset blocking and/or seizure (Brad).

REV_00131859

Each subject should obviously be treated in as much depth as you believe it would be appropriate for the Judge to provide Andy; however, my own opinion is that we should try to have each section be no longer (and preferably shorter) than one single-spaced page of text. The sections should explain the issue, what we've found out, and what, if any, ideas we have about actions we can take. Essentially the memo sections should be like executive summaries of the longer briefing memos some of us are preparing for the Judge on these subjects.

If folks would e-mail me their sections by 4:30 p.m. tomorrow, I'll stitch them together and transmit the finished product to the Judge. Jason, we may need you to do some citechecking on the document in the late afternoon tomorrow. Thanks.

This story is a roadmap for plaintiffs' suits. I would expect plaintiffs' lawyers to focus on the security of the cockpit doors, the failure to do sufficient background checks on passengers, and the failure to screen knives, among other theories. I think the cockpit doors' issue, like the variety of suits against car manufacturers re safety issues over the last 3 decades, could prove quite troublesome for the airlines in court and before juries.

Airline Tort Liability -- Background

The airline industry has submitted proposed legislation that would limit the liability of airlines and airports from lawsuits arising out of the terrorist attack on the World Trade Center. In particular, the legislation would foreclose any federal or state lawsuit brought by or on behalf of any individuals other than the passengers or crews on the airplanes involved in the recent terrorist attack. The net effect of this would be to foreclose all lawsuits brought by or on behalf of the individuals who were on the ground at the time of the attack.

Under applicable law, the airlines and airports are potentially liable for any harm caused to those in the World Trade Center arising out of the airlines, and/or airports, negligence. Any lawsuit brought in connection with the World Trade Center attack would likely be brought under the laws of either New York or Massachusetts, because any security breach that might have occurred would have taken place in Massachusetts (where both flights originated), and the actual harm took place in New York. New York, like all but a small handful of states, applies the negligence standard to damages caused on the ground as a result of an airplane crash. See Faby v. Air France, 449 N.Y.S.2d 1018, 1021 (Civil Ct. 1982); Crist v. Civil Air Patrol, 278 N.Y.S.2d 430, 433-435 (Sup. Ct. 1967); Wood v. United Airlines, 223 N.Y.S.2d 692, 695-698, aff.d., 226 N.Y.S.2d 1022 (App. Div. 2d Dept. 1962). The same appears to be true of Massachusetts according to two federal district court decisions, see Brown v. United States, 230 F. Supp. 774, 776 (1964); Lund v. United States, 104 F. Supp. 756 (1952), though no Massachusetts state court has addressed the issue.

In practice, this means that liability can be established if two steps are met. First, a potential plaintiff would have to demonstrate that the airlines, and/or airports, negligence in maintaining airport security allowed the hijackers to board and hijack the airplanes. For example, the plaintiffs may allege inadequate security in background checks of passengers or the failure to ensure that cockpit doors were secure, as they are in other countries such as Israel. Second, the plaintiff would have to demonstrate that the harm to the individuals in the World Trade Center was a foreseeable consequence of that negligence) that it was foreseeable that, as a result of lax security, hijackers would take control of an airplane and crash it, causing damage to those on the ground. Whether such lawsuits would be successful would turn on the evidence of negligence that could be adduced in a given case, as well as the court,s or jury,s assessment of foreseeability.

There has been some concern expressed that under New Jersey law, airlines and airports would face much higher liability exposure. Were New Jersey law applicable to any lawsuits related to the World Trade Center, this concern would be well founded, for New Jersey is one of a handful of states that holds airlines &absolutely liable8 for damages caused on the ground as a result of an airplane crash. See N.J. Stat. § 6:2-7. This is true, moreover, even if the airplane causing the damage was stolen from its owner) a circumstance analogous to damage resulting from a hijacking. See Torchia v. Fisher, 95 N.J. 43, 47 (Sup. Ct. 1983). However, it is very unlikely that New Jersey law would apply to any World Trade Center lawsuits, for, as discussed above, any wrongful conduct related to the World Trade Center took place in New York and/or Massachusetts, not New Jersey. (New Jersey law could, however, apply to lawsuits brought by individuals injured as a result of the attack on the Pentagon, for that flight originated in Newark).

Tort Liability -- Options

Possible federal legislation regarding tort liability for airline accidents

Elimination of certain tort causes of action by federal legislation by, for example, enacting a &compliance with federal safety and security standards8 defense to tort liability; such legislation would ensure that airlines are immune from state tort suits alleging safety and security failures if they comply with federal safety and security standards as applied retroactively to suits arising out of events of September 11, such legislation would trigger constitutional challenges under the Taking and Due Process Clauses that could well be successful under current Supreme Court doctrine

Damages caps on tort suits, such as eliminating punitive damages or imposing a maximum damages cap for all damages

as applied retroactively to events of September 11, such caps would raise constitutional challenges, although less likely to succeed than the wholesale elimination of state tort causes of action

Procedural changes so that that suits arising out of airline crashes are consolidated in a single federal court or at least can be removed to federal court, notwithstanding extant venue and diversity jurisdiction limitations; this change would help to prevent plaintiffs from forum shopping for favorable state court judges and juries as applied retroactively, this is likely to survive a challenge as it would be a procedural change

Given the constitutional concerns with the retroactive effect of any legislation, any new legislation should have a severability clause.

Antitrust Law Options

ú Airlines are seeking a broadly worded waiver of the antitrust laws that would allow competing airlines to coordinate and allocate among themselves scheduled flight arrivals and departures. It would allow any & U.S. air carrier [to] file with the Secretary of Transportation a request for approval of discussions, agreements, or coordinated arrangements with one or more other U.S. air carriers relating to limiting flights.⁸

ú DOJ strongly opposes this legislation in its current form. While they would support a variety of alternatives (including loan guarantees and financial awards), they are concerned that it provides the air carriers with extremely broad authority to engage in anti-competitive conduct without having to make a sufficiently rigorous showing that there is a market failure that needs to be addressed.

ú If there is undeterred support to enact some sort of antitrust immunity, DOJ recommends that the following modifications to the proposal be made:

ú In their request to the Secretary for permission to engage in discussion, the airlines must provide specific and credible information regarding a market failure or emergency circumstance that they hope to address through their coordination. Permission would not be granted merely upon a request that the airlines need to operate more efficiently to ensure their financial success.

ú Requests should be limited to narrow and specific subjects and purposes set forth in advance, rather than for broad and open-ended discussion of any matters that might advance vague goals of & rationalization⁸ and & stability.⁸

ú Department of Transportation and Department of Justice officials should be present for any discussions

ú After the Secretary grants permission for the air carriers to engage in discussions, and after such discussions occur, the air carriers must submit to the Secretary any agreements or arrangements that the air carriers wish to implement, along with detailed information supporting the need for such agreements. The Secretary, in consultation with the Department of Justice, must approve such agreements or arrangements, before the air carriers may implement them.

ú Any proposed agreement must have a clear sunset provision limited to the duration of the emergency (which can be terminated as circumstances change), rather than the current proposal which allows all agreements reached under the grant of immunity to continue in existence without any time limit.

ú A distinction must be made between what the proposed legislation would allow and discussions and agreements among the carriers that may be necessary to address security issues. DOJ supports cooperation among airlines to address all elements affecting the security of air travel.

War Risk Insurance Act

ú Insurance analysts predict that, as a result of Tuesday,s events, airline carriers will no longer be able to obtain liability coverage for acts of terrorism and will see dramatic increases in the cost of other coverage.

ú Two airlines have informed us that their insurance provider has imposed an immediate 900% increase in terrorism coverage; for each airline, this amounts to an additional cost of approximately $100 million.

ú The War Risk Insurance Act provides the President and Secretary of Transportation with the authority to step in and provide airlines with insurance, but only for foreign flights.

ú The Act (codified at 49 USC 44301 et seq.) authorizes &the Secretary of Transportation [to] provide insurance and reinsurance against loss or damage arising out of any risk from the operation of an American aircraft or foreign-flag aircraft⁸ in &foreign air commerce⁸ or &between at least 2 places, all of which are outside the United States.⁸ 49 USC 44302(a)(1).

ú &Insurance or reinsurance may be provided only when the Secretary decides that the insurance cannot be obtained on reasonable terms from an insurance carrier.⁸ Id. 44302(a)(2).

ú The Secretary may provide this insurance only with the approval of the President. The President may approve the insurance &only after deciding that the continued operation⁸ of the aircraft to be insured is necessary to carry out the foreign policy of the United States Government.⁸ Id. 44302(b).

ú The Secretary of Transportation has offered this coverage at least four times in history: during the Vietnam War, the Gulf War, the period close to the TWA hijacking, and in conjunction with the humanitarian relief air services to Haiti.

ú Proposal: The President may wish to propose legislation that would extend the Secretary of Transportation's authority under the War Risk Insurance Act to domestic flights. It may also be advisable to expand the circumstances under which the President can provide his approval for the issuance of insurance. The President should be permitted to approve the insurance if he determines it is necessary to ensure the continued operation of the air carriers. His authority should not be limited only where he deems the insurance &necessary to carry out the foreign policy.⁸

File attachment <P_QBKP3004_WHO.TXT_1>

Under the laws of the State of New York and most other states, negligence is the legal standard of care by which the airlines' security practices would be assessed in any tort suit against the airlines arising out of the September 11 hijackings. A class action suit alleging that the airlines were negligent -- for example, by failing to ensure sufficient screening of passengers or to provide secure cockpit doors -- has a real chance of success, or at least of inducing a massive settlement before jury verdict, depending on what facts emerge in discovery about the airlines' security practices and procedures. The amount required to settle or the amount of damages, including punitive damages, awarded by a jury could exceed any reasonable amount that the airlines could earn. In addition, suits may be brought not only against the two airlines -- United and American -- but also against other firms, notably Boeing, that may be alleged to have designed aircraft without sufficiently secure cockpit doors.

There are two possible options to reduce the airlines' exposure: (i) legislation eliminating any recovery by plaintiffs for the airlines' alleged negligence in these accidents or (ii) legislation under which the federal government would assume the risk and cost of any damages awards against the airlines.

According to Counsel's Office, the first option is constitutionally problematic: Courts have held that a tort cause of action is a property right that the government cannot take away after the right has vested -- that is, after the injury giving rise to the cause of action has occurred -- without just compensation to the plaintiff.

The second option, whereby the federal government would become responsible for plaintiffs' compensatory damages, likely would survive constitutional challenge. In cases involving accidents arising out of private companies' weapons testing programs, for example, courts have upheld substitute federal government remedial schemes that retroactively displaced state tort suits. This option would require congressional action in the form of federal legislation that substitutes the Federal Tort Claims Act for state tort suits against the airlines and thereby makes the federal government responsible for any compensatory damages to which the plaintiffs otherwise would be entitled. (Punitive damages are not available under the FTCA and thus would not be available to plaintiffs if this option were pursued.)

All airlines also fear the consequences of state tort liability for future accidents. There are several options that would help to ensure that a future accident does not threaten an airline's continued financial viability. One option is legislation overriding state tort law in cases where a hijacking, terrorism, or war causes an injury. A second option is legislation precluding state tort suits in cases where the airlines have complied with all applicable federal security standards. A third option is legislation imposing damages caps in suits against the airlines arising out of accidents.

We ask your concurrence for the principle that, given the facts now available, that the federal government, not the airline industry, should assume liability for tort actions brought as a result of last Tuesday's events.

_____ Agree with principle that the government, not the airline industry should assume liability.

_____ Disagree with this principle.

Lorraine,

Here are some more notes for OSI's master record of legal advice.

Brett Kavanaugh met with me and Barry about 2 weeks ago to go over A-List e-mail issues. Below are the notes I took over the phone when Brett and I went over his advice last Wednesday. Brett is working on sending the notes below in a more formal fashion. I'll pass a copy on to you when I receive them.

Begin notes:

Brett had a chance to go over OSI's questions with the Department of Justice, and they agree with Brett's advice.

Linking to new information on non-White House Web sites, either in White House e-mails or on the White House Web site, is not a problem. Posting or e-mailing news articles in full will need case-by-case analysis. Avoid Web sites that charge money. Excerpts are permissible to use both in e-mail or on the White House Web site. Use reason when excerpting. The whole article should not be used End notes.

I'll let you know more when I get more information.

Thanks,
NEIL

Thanks. We stumbled upon that -- it's called the War Risk Insurance Act, and there's a section on it in the memo from the Judge to Josh. We've also provided a short description of it to Carlos.

In my talks with DOD counsel, I've learned of some legal authority that might be relevant to your work on airline economics. Section 49 USC 44302 allows the Secretary of Transportation to offer low-cost insurance to air carriers and appears to apply in non-war conditions. (Insurance companies recently gave certain air carriers 7-day notice of a rate increase.)

Subject: DOJ package

Are you available to meet at 7:00pm in Room 211 to discuss the DOJ draft legislation? Judge Gonzales will chair a DCPC discussion on the legislation tomorrow morning at 10:30am. Can we try to reach internal consensus on a recommended approach tonight so that we can advise our principals before tomorrow's discussion?

Subject: Room Assignments

Tim wants to make sure that rooms are chosen according to seniority based on when you graduated from law school. Kyle is to be included using the same formula.

Also, OA is refusing to release the floor plan tonight for copying, so I will check with them first thing in the morning. In the meantime, if you want to proceed with assignments, Counsel's Office will be occupying rooms 173, 171, 169, 167, 165, 163, 161, 160.5, 160A, 158, 157, 156, 155, 154, 152, 153, 151, 151A, and 149.

Do we have actual labels, or do you mean whatever we write/tape on the boxes ourselves? If actual labels, I'd love to get some down here in our suite.

Please put the labels on the side of the box, rather than the top, as they will be stacked one on top of the other.

Thanks.

Tim will be coming over to check out the space. The one big question is what to do with the large room (Northeast corner of the building, room 160A). My suggestion is to put the five current detailees in that room. If Tim thinks that is a good idea, then room 158 (the room through which the large room is accessed) could be used for Lori and Jason or Brent or for files. If all this makes sense, then I would want to be in Room 157. I want to see what Tim thinks.

Brad -- I thought Brett had asked you to take a look at the financial provisions contained in the DOJ package. If he didn't, will you do so?
